SOME FACTS

Gleaned from the Last Government Bulletin.

The last bulletin of the department of labor at Washington gives forty pages to an interesting report of an agent of the department describing the result of his investigations in the Klondike region from early January to August, this year. The facts of climate, prices and wages and general financial result up to date are striking. As to climate, Fort Yukon, just within the arctic circle, hardly can be called salubrious. The average temperature for February was 29 degrees below zero. The coldest day of the winter registered 62 degrees below. The average for the ten consecutive coldest days was about 50 degrees below. Yet "the old-timers were unanimous in saying that the winter of 1897-98 was the mildest ever known in northern Alaska." But these conditions were mitigated very greatly by dry atmosphere and freedom from winds, and the agent adds that he "has experienced far more disagreeable weather in Minnesota and Montana than that which prevailed last winter at Circle City."

Statements of some of the prices touched tell vivid tales of the conditions. Flour ranged from $50 to $180 per sack of fifty pounds during the colder weather, moose meat $1.25 a pound, beef and mutton $1 a pound, firewood from $40 to $75 a cord, nails $5 a pound, tobacco $7.50 a pound, liquor $75 a gallon. Of whisky 2,000 gallons arrived in Dawson early in May and sold within an hour in bulk for $45 a gallon, and was all consumed within a few days. The lucky importer assured his friends that he cleared a net profit of $60,000 by his virtue. But by no means was every one so fortunate. On the whole, as always is the case, a very large proportion of those embarking in such speculations made little or met with actual loss, because they happened to arrive when the market was already fully stocked with the lines of goods they brought in; besides, many boats were wrecked at rapids, and their cargoes were a total loss. Hence, says the Bulletin, "while this field of enterprise yields enormous returns in case of success, the difficulties are so great that conservative men who know the conditions are loath to enter it." Restaurant prices, $1 for a bowl of soup, plain steak $3.50 and so on. In early spring "oranges and lemons sold as rapidly as they could be handed out for $1.50 apiece, while apples met a ready sale at $1 apiece." Eggs, $18 a dozen. A consequence of all this at one time was the encouragement of rascality from an unique cause—"the police could not arrest a man and confine him, for the reason that they could not feed him."

Of course against these prices must be set the scale of wages. For example, common labor and mining labor from $1 to $2.50 an hour, chief cook in a restaurant $100 a week, waiters $50 a week, dishwashers $5 a day, and all this restaurant help boarded free besides. Bartenders $15 a day, bookkeepers $17.50 a day, porters $10 a day. The average receipts of a successful bar in early spring and summer, $2,000 a day. "The Pavilion (a variety theater and dance hall) opened about the middle of June, and the bar receipts the first night were $12,200. The theater had three actors and six actresses under engagement at $150 each per week." Barbers earned $15 to $40 a day.

The following is the statement as to medical practice: "On June 25 there were about seventy-five physicians in Dawson, and they were still coming. Ten or twelve were actively engaged in practice. Fees have been reduced since last year from $17 to $10 per visit. The charge for office consultation is $8.50, the patient buying his own medicine, prescriptions costing from $2.50 to $7.50. So far as could be learned by careful inquiry, this is the only instance in which there has been a reduction in charges for professional or other services on the Klondike."

The figures given regarding the output of Klondike mining are instructive. "The bankers and the agents of the commercial companies who have the best means of knowing the facts, practically agree in placing the output for the season at $9,000,000," and "no intelligent man on the ground who is acquainted with the conditions has placed the figure above $12,000,000." The actual mint returns show from $6,000,000 to $6,500,000. Regarding the disappointment nature of these figures to investors, most of whom have expected a great deal more, the Bulletin says "the production is remarkable when the adverse conditions are considered"—the chief of these being the small working force on account of the scarcity of provisions. "It is probable that at no time during the season were there more than 2,000 men at work, while less than 1,000 made full time for the working period of about six months. This would indicate a production of over $9,000 to the man—a most extraordinary yield, and one which was probably never equaled in any other placer-mining district in the world." Nevertheless, the comparison of this output with the expense incurred gives food for reflection.

"It is a common assumption among those acquainted with the uncertainties of mining for the precious metals that every dollar's worth of gold extracted from the earth costs somebody at least $1 in money or labor." Taking the actual count of 40,000 men who reached the Yukon gold fields during the year beginning with July 15, 1897, and the conservative estimate that 20,000 more undertook the journey but failed to reach the ground, and estimating the average expenditures of these 60,000 men for outfit and transportation at $500 each, and adding the money invested in ocean and river vessels and the organizing and capitalizing of commercial and mining companies, "it may safely be assumed that this great movement during the year following its inception cost the participants $35,000,000. It is equally safe to assume that in the case of 75 per cent of the individuals involved, their contributions are an absolute loss to them"; and, "as against this enormous outlay we have for the period under consideration, as indicated by the mint returns, a gross product from the Yukon placers of less than $12,000,000."

But, The Bulletin says, this result of the first attempts "should not be permitted to obscure the fact that there is now being developed on the Yukon a mineral zone of wonderful richness, which will eventually contribute hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of the world. The lesson to be learned from the present situation is that it will take years of hard work to bring the mines up to their highest point of productiveness, and that the country offers no opportunities for professional men or others who are not equipped by nature for the most exacting manual labor. When common carriers on the Yukon that depend on the public for support are ready to carry for the public without discriminating in favor of selected patrons, when 'competition in commerce' shall come to mean a decrease and not an increase in the cost of living, and when the people of that long-neglected section of our country shall again attract the attention of congress and hold it long enough to secure the enactment of laws for the protection of life and property, then, and not till then, will it be possible to bring to full development the marvelous riches of the Yukon gold fields."

TWO DANCES

Both on the Same Evening Last Week.

Aristocracy, genealogy and "some other things" has been the subject of conversation in this city for the past few days. Such things cannot be discussed—not even by the quiet and peaceable residents of Thief River Falls—without numerous altercations. It was all caused by two dances given last Friday evening, but the cause of two dances being given on the same evening is another story.

Sometime ago the Royal Neighbors (which by the way is composed of some of the brightest and best ladies in this city) decided to give a dance. Now everybody knows—or ought to know—that it has long been the custom in this city to invite everybody by issuing a general invitation, the fact being assued that all residents of Thief River Falls were ladies and gentlemen. But the ladies departed from all precedents and issued invitations. That's what caused the trouble. There was heart-burning, etc., among the unfortunate for a few days, but it did not last long for they decided to have a dance of their own. The Atheletic club hall was accordingly rented, good music provided, and a large crowd entertained.

And the Royal Neighbors had a successful dance.

SEED GRAIN

Will Not Be Furnished by the State in the Future.

The Supreme court, by Judge Canty, has filed a decison declaring that the acts of the legislature appropriating state funds for seed-grain loans are unconstitutional, because they appropriate public money for a private purpose. But the court also declares that the people who have borrowed money for the purchase of seed-grain under these acts cannot escape payment on account of this fact, because, having taken advantage of the acts and derived the benefits from them, they are now estopped from pleading their unconstitutionality as a defense.

The plea of unconstitutionality was made on several grounds, but the appropriation of public funds for private purposes is the only one allowed. The test case was made in a despute over 142 bushels of wheat held by August Peterson in Marshall county.

In recent years a good many thousand dollars have been loaned by the state in this manner in cases where storm or drought prevented the saving of seed-grain in the usual way.

Lost.

Two notes, $65 each, dated Dec. 24, 1898, made by L. E. Maxwell in favor of Durnin & Turville, were lost the first of the week. All parties are hereby warned not to purchase the same.

A HAPPY MAN

That's What Chas. Tedford Is.

Judge Frank M. Ives retired from the bench last Friday, and the event was celebrated in Thief River Falls by Chas. Tedford.

Mr. Tedford, as every one is aware, has but one weak point in his make-up. He loves—for his own aggrandizement—to listen to the dull thud, which a five cent piece makes in falling to the bottom of a nickel-in-the-slot machine. The sound was very distasteful to Judge Ives, as all who attended the term of court for this county last February will testify. Mr. Tedford's new machine, however, is decidedly more innocent than the one he formally owned. It gives sweet music in five cent quantities instead of a prize.

A Wine Bibber Among Them.

An eastern liquor house recently sent out circulars offering to send a bottle of wine to anyone who would furnish them with the names of fourteen men one or more who would order a bill of goods from them. A list of fourteen well-known prohibitionists of this town was sent in by a prohibition business man of Churchs Ferry, and last week he received his bottle of wine, which is an indication that one of the number is taking his bitters on the quiet. The question is, which one?—Churchs Ferry Sun.

Cash for Chippewas.

The Indian commissioner has issued an order for the payment of interest money to the Chippewas on the White Earth agency. The funds will be disbursed next month, aggregating about $85,000. Agent Sutherland has been instructed to make the payments at White Earth, Leech lake, Cass lake and Red lake. Heretofore payments have been made at two points on the agency, much to the inconvenience of the Indians.

Another Fire.

Red Lake Falls was visited again by a fire last Wednesday evening and the building and stock of Lemieux Bros., general merchants was totally destroyed. The loss is estimated at $8,000 with insurance to the amount of $5,500. The origin of the fire is unknown.

A WRECK.

On This Branch Last Thursday Afternoon.

A broken rail on this branch caused a wreck to the train while enroute to Crookston last Thursday night, which considering the way the cars were scattered about was very fortunate in that no casualties resulted. The accident occured at bridge No. 5, about three miles east of Shirley. Engineer Laramie was bowling along at the ordinary rate of speed, when upon looking back over his train he saw the rear cars begin to pile up. After the passage of the engine and three cars, a rail broke under the fourth, and the result was that three box cars, the combination baggage and smoking car, and the passenger coach all left the track. The engine had just reached the bridge and the cars bumped along the ties until the first one to leave the rails struck the bridge when it went over the embankment, and upset, followed by all of the others.

Conductor Carlton and his brakemen, Frank and Will Andrist, actek promptly in getting the passengers out of the coaches, and ascertaining that none were seriously injured. Engineer Laramie pulled down to the junction at Shirley where a freight train was waiting for the passenger to pass, secured the caboose and went back after the passengers who were waiting in the bitter cold on the prairie. The run was made to Crookston arriving there an hour late.

The only person who was injured so as to require the services of a physician was Mrs. Charles Wilcox, of Sunrise, Minn., who had been in this city visiting Mrs. F. H. Kratka, who was taken to the office of Dr. Dampier who found some slight bruises from which she will soon recover.

The cars, one of which was loaded with flour, were quite badly wrecked, and the freight scattered considerably. A wrecking outfit was sent over from Grand Forks, and succeeded in getting the wreck picked up Friday.

JOHN LIND is now governor of Minnesota.

MRS. ISABEL MALLON, best known by her nom de plume of "Ruth Ashmore" and "Bab," died last week in New York city.

THE village of Fosston is furnishing electric lights to business men at an extremely low rate—lights—the price is of course gauged by the number used—are furnished at a rate as low as 15 cents per month.

IT will take some time to establish a good government in Cuba. Eighty per cent. of the population is illiterate, and the island has been under the domination of Spanish law so long, that the people are ignorant of the responsibilities now resting upon them.

WHILE he has reached no decision and will make no recommendations on the subject, it is believed that sooner or later the president will recommend that the $20,000,000 indemnity which has been paid to Spain shall ultimately be charged against the Filipinos and both the interest and principal paid from their revenues. He does not think it should be a charge against the people of the United states.

No business concern in the country would for a minute think of conducting its business on the plan that the State has been conducting its public institution. What is the use of a dozen boards and commissions to do work that could better be done by one? And what is the use of incurring the expense of all these boards when one could do it better and for infinitely less money? Why not make a change, then, and have the business of the State conducted just as well and just as economically as the same business would be done if some sensible business man had charge of it as a personal affair? The whole problem would be solved by the selection of a suitable board of control, to take charge of all the institutions and keep down the expense. And at the same time it could better keep up the character of the service.—Princeton Union.

The Trouble at Butte.

Butte, Mont., finds itself in a very peculiar condition. An exchange comments upon the matter as follows:

"It is a singular and difficult situation which exists at Butte, Mont. The prosperity—indeed, the very existence—of that city is dependent upon the smelters and reduction works. The activity of those establishments is an index to the welfare of the town. Yet the busier the smelters the worse it is for the health of the population. The fumes of sulphur and other irritating substances play havoc with human lungs, and as the smelters increase their capacity, the health of the city becomes worse and worse. The people of Butte are in a quandary. If they induce the smelters to shut down or seek other locations there will nothing left in Butte. If the present situation continues, the town will be a mere hospital with a graveyard attachment. It would be difficult to suggest a remedy other than to scatter the smelting establishments upon the outskirts of the city, and even that expedient would probably prove to be a mere palliation rather than a remedy. The citizens of Butte will have to choose between their material prosperity and their health. The smelters can always find workmen if they pay high enough wages."

WRECKED THE VESSEL.

A Possible Danger of Steam Jets as Fire Extinguishers.

For many years steam jets have been considered excellent means for extinguishing fires in inclosed spaces, and examples of their good services have been abundant. The theory of their action of course is, like that of the several kinds of fire extinguishing powders which have been proposed at different times, that the steam in the one case and the stifling fumes from the powders in the other displace the air in any particular space under consideration, and with it the oxygen as well, by which alone combustion can be sustained.

In at least one instance, however, the position was taken that if the steam jets did not extinguish a fire promptly they soon became a source of danger, and as such were held accountable for the loss about a year ago of a cargo steamer carrying several hundred tons of coal, and as many more of miscellaneous chemicals and old rope. Fire broke out in one of the holds, which were fitted with steam jet fixtures, and the jets were at once turned on. On the day following it was proposed to try a hose in addition to the jets, and one of the upper deck hatches was therefore taken off.

The almost immediate result was a violent explosion, killing one of the officers and seriously injuring another. All the other hatches were blown off at the same time, and the ship began to leak, so that she soon had to be abandoned. One explanation advanced was that the steam from the jets, passing over the incandescent cargo, formed water gas, which, with suitable air admixture, became explosive, with the result noted. The theory is not a comforting one, but whether it portrays a possible condition of things yet remains to be demonstrated.—Cassier's Magazine.

EASY FOR MORPHY.

A Story of the Great Chess Master and a Celebrated Painting.

On reading the notes on Paul Morphy's visit to Philadelphia I am reminded of an incident in connection with his visit to Richmond about the same time, which was related to me some years ago by the Rev. Mr. H. of that city. I do not remember ever to have seen it in print. Mr. Morphy was Mr. H.'s guest while in the city, and on his arrival was first ushered into the library, and his attention was at once attracted by a painting over the mantel, which was a fine copy of a celebrated painting representing a game of chess between a young man and the devil, the stake being the young man's soul.

The artist had most graphically depicted the point in the game where it was apparently the young man's move, and he seemed just to realize the fact that he had lost the game, the agony of despair being shown in every line of his features and attitude, while the devil from the opposite side of the table gloated over him with fiendish delight. The position of the game appeared utterly hopeless for the young man, and Mr. H. said he had often set it up and studied it with his chess friends, and all agreed the young man's game was certainly lost.

Mr. Morphy walked up to the picture and studied it for several minutes, when finally, turning to Mr. H., he said:

"I can win the game for the young man."

Mr. H. was of course astonished and said, "Is it possible?"

Mr. Morphy replied, "Get out the men and board and let us look at it."

The position was set up, and in a few rapid moves he demonstrated a complete win for the young man, and the devil was checkmated.—Robert Monford in American Chess Magazine.

Hungarian Gypsy Minstrels.

The gypsy minstrels form a caste by themselves. Their appearance is always more swarthy than that of other Hungarian musicians, their dress is sometimes purposely fantastic, and their manner of life is far more Bohemian than the most liberal minded artist would care to own to. Every hotel and restaurant in Budapest possesses its gypsy band, and the method of payment is as free and easy as the music itself and their life. The hotel keeper is not bound by any contract, but at various intervals throughout the performance one of his gypsies takes a dinner plate and goes round among the various guests in the hall from table to table, receiving in the plate what the latter like to put there. The favorite coin deposited there is the nickel 10 kreutzer piece, answering to our twopence. I have not often seen a florin or a kronen (half a florin). The whole collection is, as a rule, made up of twopences.—Good Words.

THE CUMBERLAND.

At anchor in Hampton Roads we lay
On board of the Cumberland, sloop-of-war,
And at times from the fortress across the bay
The alarum of drums swept past
Or a bugle blast
From the camp on the shore.

Then far away to the south up rose
A little feather of snow white smoke,
And we knew that the iron ship of our foes
Was steadily steering its course
To try the force
Of our ribs of oak.

Down upon us heavily runs,
Silent and sullen, the floating fort;
Then comes a puff of smoke from her guns
And leaps the terrible death,
With fiery breath,
From each open port.

We are not idle, but send her straight
Defiance back in a full broadside!
As hail rebounds from a roof of slate
Rebounds our heavier hail
From each iron scale
Of the monster's hide.

"Strike your flag!" the rebel cries
In his arrogant old plantation strain.
"Never!" our gallant Morris replies.
"It is better to sink than to yield!"
And the whole air pealed
With the cheers of our men.

Then, like a kraken huge and black
She crushed our ribs in her iron grasp.
Down went the Cumberland all a wrack,
With a sudden shudder of death
And the cannon's breath
For her dying gasp.

Next morn, as the sun rose over the bay,
Still floated our flag at the mainmast head.
Lord, how beautiful was thy day!
Every waft of the air
Was a whisper of prayer
Or a dirge for the dead.

Ho, brave hearts that went down in the seas!
Ye are at peace in the troubled stream.
Ho, brave land, with hearts like these,
Thy flag, that is rent in twain,
Shall be one again
And without a seam!

—Longfellow.

"FILLED" BEDCLOTHES.

They Are Moisture Attractors, and Death Lurks in Them.

Science, thy name is adulteration! Another terror has been added to existence by the revelations made by a trade paper of the processes by which certain manufacturers "fill" the sheets and blankets with which they flood the market.

We are told that after a piece of waste sheeting has been woven the cloth is passed over a trough containing a solution of zinc, sulphate of magnesia (commonly known as epsom salts) and water. This is called a sprinkler. A revolving brush plays a spray of these noxious ingredients upon the cloth, with the result that a 50 pound piece after the operation weighs 74 pounds more than when it left the loom. As the goods are sold by the pound, the object is evident.

But what about the purchaser? A piece cuts up into ten pairs of sheets. Each pair therefore contains three-quarters of a pound of moisture attracting material. The results are appalling. As soon as a wet day comes the sheets become damp and the luckless wight who sleeps between them is apt to contract a chill that may send him to the bourn whence no traveler returns. Even if his suspicions are aroused and he boldly casts aside the sheets and wraps himself in the blankets it may avail him nothing, for the blanket makers have learned the trick, and the same ill results may ensue.

Next we shall hear that the counterpane makers are equally astute, and the timid sleeper may be driven to provide himself with the woolen sleeping bags that suggest travels in the farthest north. The only advantage of these "filled" or heavily "sized" sheets and blankets is that they are death to insects, but if they kill the sleeper as well as the pulex irritans—to say nothing of the cimex lectularius—what boots it?—London Telegraph.

"Why, what is it—are you out of employment?"

"No, mem; work's in a fair state o' stiddiness, and not a cint do I owe, but it's lashins o' trouble I've got!"

"Are you not paid promptly?"

"As promptly as the day coms round."

"What is your financial distress, then?"

"Well, mem" (in a burst of horror), "what's killin me is, I earn $6 the week an pay $8 for me board, an God only knows how I do it!"—Short Stories.

Says a dealer in antiquities: "I had a fat woman in here the other day. Well, sir, she was a caution, was that fat woman. She would have the antique all through her house, sir, nothing but the antique for her house decoration. Why, sir, judging by what that fat woman said and bought in this shop, I should judge she was heartbroken, sir, that she couldn't get the shades of her ancestors for her parlor windows."—New York Tribune.

The Year 1899.

The following is some mathematical facts in relation to the figures contained in 1899.

Add the first two figures and the sum equals each of the last two figures—1 plus 8 equals 9.

Add the last two figures and the sum equals the first two figures—9 plus 9 equals 18.

Add the first three figures and the sum equals the first two figures—1 plus 8 plus 9 equals 18.

Add the first, second and fourth figures and the sum equals the first two figures—1 plus 8 plus 9 equals 18.

Add all four figures and they make a multiple of each of the last two figures—1 plus 8 plus 9 plus 9 equals 27.

Subtract the first figure from each of the last two figures and the remainder represents the second figure—9 minus 1 equals 8.

Subtract the second figure from each of the last two figures and the remainder represents the first figure—9 minus 8 equals 1.

Subtract either of the last two figures from the first two figures and the remainder equals either of the last two figures—18 minus 9 equals 9.

Subtract the first two figures from the last two figures and the remainder represents the first two figures reversed—99 minus 18 equals 81.

Multiply the last two figures and the result represents the first two figures reversed—9 times 9 equals 81.

Multiply the last three figures, add the result and the sum represents the first two figures—9 times 9 times 8 equals 648; 6 plus 4 plus 8 equals 18.

Multiply the last two figures by the first two figures, add the result and the sum represents the first two figures—99 times 18 equals 1782; 1 plus 7 plus 8 plus 2 equals 18.

Multiply the last two figures by the second figure, add the result and the sum represents the first two figures—99 times 8 equals 792; 7 plus 9 plus 2 equals 18.

Multiply the last two figures and to the result add the first two figures and the total represents the two last figures—9 times 9 equals 81; 81 plus 18 equals 99.

Multiply the third figure by the second figure, add the first figure, multiply the sum by the fourth figure, add the result and the total represents the first two figures—9 times 8 equals 72; 72 plus 1 equals 73; 73 times 9 equals 657; 6 plus 5 plus 7 equals 18.

DIED LAST WEEK

Mrs. Wm. Lennon, a Former Resident.

Mrs. Wm. Lennon, who until recently was a resident of this city, died last Wednesday, Dec. 26, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Dr. A. L. Richards, at Seymour, Wis., of consumption. The funeral services were held at Royalton, Wis.

The deceased was a most estimable lady and had a large circle of friends in this city, who will be pained to hear of her demise. She leaves a husband and several sisters and brothers, all of whom will have the sympathy of the public.

Geo. R. Ismon, who was sentenced at the last term of the federal court to serve 60 days and pay $100 fine for introducing liquor at Red Lake agency, was last week discharged by Commissioner Mix. Ismon had served his term, but had no money to pay his fine.

High Officials Take in Washing.

Samoa, Stevenson's island home and grave, is the only country in the world where its rulers and chief justices vie with each other in the honorable work of the laundry. There is no false pride about a chief of Samoa, who will discuss high politics with you one moment and the next make a tender for your washing. What is more, when he has executed the washing to your satisfaction he will ask you to give him a testimonial to that effect, with which to bait succeeding visitors.—New York Journal.

AILEEN KENNAGH.

"There's some one coming to the front door. Lenham, go quick and tell them we have nothing for beggars."

Mark Lenham, dressed in respectable black, as became the butler in a mansion like Eyre Hall, obeyed the order with all the pomp and circumstance of the little brief authority.

"Get along, you! We don't allow no"— "Mark!"

The man stared. His face grew blank. "Why, it's Aileen!"

Mark Lenham had told Aileen Kennagh long, long ago under the shadow of the beech copses of the old home that he loved her.

"Yes, it's me, Mark," panted the poor, weary little girl, "and I've walked so far, and I'm so tired! Aren't you glad to see me? Won't you give me a drink of water?"

And she sank down, weary and exhausted, on one of the rustic seats close to the colonnaded porch.

"You mustn't sit there," said Mark hurriedly. "You must go round to the servants' door. I—I—of course I'm glad to see you, Aileen—as an old neighbor of course on the other side of the water. Lucilla!" to a gayly dressed lady's maid, "this is Aileen Kennagh, from my county at home. Will you get her a glass of water?"

Something in the tone in which he spoke to the pretty Lucilla made Aileen look quickly up.

"Of course any friend of yours, Mark, we'll do our best to make comfortable. Come along, Miss Kennagh."

"All I want is a glass of cold water," said Aileen, visibly shrinking, "and just to speak one word to Mark."

"I—I'm busy just at present," began Lenham hesitatingly, "but"—

Aileen turned away with a chill at her warm Irish heart.

"It's not myself will be troubling you, then," she said. "I can get a drink at any wayside spring."

And she went away hoping yet fearing to be called back by Mark Lenham before she had passed the great iron gates of the gardens at Eyre Hall. But Mark never spoke. It would be more awkward than he liked to contemplate being called to account by the old love while the new in the spruce person of Miss Lucilla Jones stood by. And besides what could he do to help Aileen? What though they wanted a nursemaid at Eyre Hall? He would not like to recommend a green girl like Aileen.

Meanwhile poor Aileen, weary, dusty and heartsick, had paused at a spring in the woods just beyond the gates of Eyre Hall to slake her parching thirst.

As she was about to rise—she had drunk, scooping up the crystal drops with the palm of her brown, shapely hand—a voice from the wooded cliff overhead arrested her movements.

"Stop just a minute, please. You are the very figure I want to light up the gloom of my landscape—just one minute!"

Aileen smiled and stood still, and she saw that the gentleman artist above had a little child in a black velvet blouse playing around him.

But even as she looked the little sprite leaned one degree too far over the almost perpendicular rock and lost its balance. She sprang forward with a cry, but too late.

Little Herbert Eyre lay in a senseless heap on the soft grass close to the brook edge, one plump white arm doubled under him and broken!

"Is he dead?"

Mr. Eyre stood pale and terror stricken beside the little creature as Aileen lifted him tenderly to her lap and sprinkled cold drops on his marble forehead.

"No, sir, please God, but he's badly hurt, I'm afraid. Let me carry him. It'll only torture him to be changed from one to another, and I'm strong. Is it far away from where you live?"

"No; you can see the chimney tops from here. It is Eyre Hall. I am Mr. Eyre."

And so, carrying the little heir of all those broad lands in her arms, Aileen Kennagh once more entered the domains whose dust she had shaken off her feet but a brief while ago, without deigning a glance at Mark Lenham, who chanced to be the one to let them in!

Little Bertie clung to Aileen's neck and would not leave her, and he lay in her lap during the whole tedious process of setting the arm.

"I like you," said he, his baby brow contracted with pain. "Who is ou's name?"

"Aileen."

And so at Mr. Eyre's earnest entreaty Aileen staid.

And so even after the little broken arm was well again.

Mark Lenham met her one afternoon walking up from the woods when she had been about three months at Eyre Hall. How pretty she looked with her dark eyes and rose red cheeks! Lucilla Jones had just thrown him over in favor of the new coachman. He thought remorsefully of the old attachment in Ireland and decided he couldn't do better than to give Aileen a crumb of hope once more.

"Aileen," he said conciliatingly, stepping into her pathway as she was hurrying by.

"What is it, Mark?"

"You're always in such a hurry, Aileen. Can't you stop and speak to a fellow?"

"Is it anything particular, Mark?"

"Yes, it is particular, Aileen. You see, I—why can't it be between us just as it used? Why can't you be my sweetheart again, Aileen?"

"One reason is," answered Aileen composedly, "that I have long ceased to care for you, Mark Lenham. The other is that I am engaged to be married."

"You, Aileen?"

"Yes, I. Why not?"

"Who is it to?" wrathfully demanded Mark.

"To Mr. Eyre."

And so Aileen passed on, smiling quietly to herself at Mark's face of thunderstruck dismay.

For little Bertie's fondness for the sweet young rose of Ireland had somehow infected his father, and Aileen Kennagh was to become his second wife and the lady of Eyre Hall.—Exchange.

High Priced Stirrups.

The highest price ever given at a sale for a pair of stirrups was $2,100, which was the price given at a sale on July 17, 1896, at Christie's for a pair of stirrups of russet iron, inlaid with gold and silver, the work of Ambrosio Caradosso Foppa, of about the commencement of the sixteenth century. The stirrups formed part of the collection of sixteenth century objects of art of the late Earl of Warwick, which were sold by Messrs. Christie, Manson & Woods. A BIG BOMB

Explodes in Van R. Brown's Law Office.

DOES NO DAMAGE

The Whole Affair Is a Deep Mystery.

Red Lake Falls is all wrought up over what appears to be an attempt upon the life of Van. R. Brown. A bomb was placed over the door of his office, but when it exploded little damage was done and fortunately no one was hurt.

As to the motive of anyone doing a deed of this kind, there are two different views taken. One is that Mr. Brown, who has just been elected county attorney after one of the longest and hottest fights on record, was the victim of a conspiracy as he has many bitter enemies. The other theory is that Brown placed the bomb over the door himself, for the purpose of gaining public sympathy. He has been indicted for attempting to bribe a juror and will be tried at the February term of court. As to which of the two theories are true there are many people undecided. The whole thing should be thoroughly investigated, and if it should prove that Brown was the victim of a conspiracy, punishment too severe could not be mete out to the perpetrators.

Under the heading, "Was It a Bomb," the Courier, ex-County Attorney Boughton's paper says:

"An explosion in Van R. Brown's office Wednesday morning caused considerable excitement in the bank block. Mr. Wyer upon hearing the report rushed upstairs and found the glass broken from the door with bits embedded in the walls and ceiling. Mr. Brown was lying on the floor but was not badly injured, having received several scratches in the face. It seems that some explosive in a bottle wrapped in a newspaper had been placed on the transom above the door. Sheriff Sampson and B. Sivigney had been in and out of the office with Brown during the morning and Sampson had called Brown's attention to the package above the door in a joking way; Brown remarking that some one had made him a Christmas present. After their departure Brown reached up and instead of taking the article down brushed it off onto the floor where it exploded, he holding the door between himself and the explosion. Fortunately he was not badly injured. The matter should be fully investigated."

The Gazette has the following to say regarding the matter:

"At 9 o'clock Wednesday morning occupants of the Bank block were startled by a terrible explosion and the groans of a man following in quick succession. Jas. I. Wyer, president of the bank, immediately rushed up stairs and found a frightful condition of affairs in Van R. Brown's office. The room was filled with smoke and dust, particles of broken glass lying scattered around, and Mr Brown, himself just coming to his senses and in a half dazed condition with blood covering one side of his face. As soon as he came to sufficiently he explained the situation: A bomb of some description, evidently a pop bottle filled with nitroglycerine, with an explosive cap attached, had been rolled in a bundle of old newspapers and half hung caught on the inside, by the transom. A number of callers to his office that morning had noticed the thing, among them, Sheriff Sampson, B. Sivigney, Wilfred Lemieux and Peter Nimesgern. Sampson and Sivigney had each noticed the parcel, and pulled at it slightly to get it down, as it prevented the free movement of the door. Luckily for them it did not yield readily. Finally Mr. Brown made an effort, and a successful one, to dislodge the thing. Half opening the door, from the inside, he held onto the knob with one hand, while with the other he brushed the supposed paper down. It fell just on the inside of the threshold but outside of the half opened door. The report spread like wildfire through the city, and our people paused in their regular pursuits, paralyzed by the horror of the affair. Who did it? It was a murderous act. Worse than a shot fired from a revolver direct at the intended victim, or a knife thrust aimed at the heart, for it endangered the life of every person entering under that transom. Every morning either Theo. Garceau or H. H. Zaiser go into the offices over the bank to regulate the steam radiators. This morning a half dozen persons beside Mr. Brown had entered the room. In doing so, their life hung by a thread! And the would be assassin must have known this; must have calculated that to succeed in assassinating Mr. Brown he was willing to take the chances of sacrificing other lives instead. It is hard for Red Lake Falls people to realize that living in their midst are beings so low as this. And the question naturally arizes, who is safe?"

A NEW DEAL

That's What the Chippeways Are Atter.

A delegation of five Chippewa Indians went to Washington last week to protest against the further cutting of dead and down timber. They have many just complaints. In the first place they complain that the timber is being sold at a price far below its actual value and that green timber is being cut instead of dead and down. The superintendents receive $7.50 per day, which has to be paid out of the fund received from the sale of logs and it leaves very little to be distributed among the Indians, most of whom are without food and clothes.

The dead and down timber steal is not the only one the Indians have to contend with, but there is one of much larger proportions, namely, the reservation pine land steal. The Indians of Minnesota, so they claim, lost $5,000,000 by the underestimating of Red Lake pine alone, and they expect to lose an equal amount under the estimates of the present corps of estimators, including the low estimates and the unnecessary and exorbitant salaries of the estimators. The Indians wish to have the timber cut and placed upon the banks and scaled before it is sold.

MARRIED

Two Prominent St. Hilaire People.

Cards have been issued announcing the marriage of Miss Minnie Olson to Mr. Oscar F. Post which took place last Wednesday afternoon in the presence of a few invited guests outside of the family. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. Logan at the residence of the bride's parents. The groom is well and favorably known, having resided in St. Hilaire for the past fifteen years. He is the junior member of the firm of Rapp & Post. His straight forward business ways and accommodating manners have drawn many friends and customers his way and all speak very highly of him. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Olson, who have been residents of St. Hilaire for the past seventeen years. She is highly spoken of by all those who have the pleasure of her acquaintance, and all join in wishing the new couple much joy in their married life. Cosy rooms have been fitted up and they will be at home after January 12.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Dead and Down Timber.

White Earth, Minn., Jan. 4.—Under recent rulings and regulations of the general land office and the Indian department some fifty or sixty lumber camps have gone into active operations within the past week or ten days on the ceded Indian lands. It is variously estimated that between 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 feet will be cut during the winter's work in the different camps and some 2,000 to 3,000 men will be given employment.

Reports that the Minnesota volunteer regiments were the first to be mustered into the service of the United States when President McKinley issued his call for volunteers to engage in the war with Spain; that the first regiment was mustered in just thirty-seven years to a day from the time the first Minnesota regiment was mustered in for the Civil war.

Assures the legislature of his advice and assistance during the present session in the same spirit that he shall look for suggestions and aid from the legislature.

Suggests that the state binding twine plant be extended and that charges of scandal in this department be not allowed to prejudice the legislature in dealing with the proposition.

Recommends a similar increase in the rate of taxing railroads and suggests a proviso so that they may be taxed on the valuation of their property if they refuse to pay a higher gross earnings' tax.

Recommends the manufacture at the state prison of dairy and creamery supplies on state account, to be sold to Minnesota farmers so as to free them from having to pay exorbitant prices to a recently formed trust.

O. H. Myran has secured places on some important committees. He is chairman of the drainage and is also on the finance, immigration, internal improvement and printing committee.

The board of county commissioners are very anxious to secure what they term "honest competition" on printing. At their meeting last week the contract for job printing was let to the Courier, although the bid of the Red Lake Falls Gazette was much lower.

There does not appear to be any great amount of harmony in the Populist party in this county as will be seen by the following from the Red Lake Falls Gazette:

We understand that Norland is after a job under the railroad and warehouse commission. We trust Hon. P. M. Ringdal will look into the matter well and make no blunder by wrong recommendations. The Gazette desires to register an emphatic protest against Henry Norland's appointment.

In justice to Mr. Norland, the News will state that he is one of the strongest and most influential men in this section of the county.

David M. Clough has been governor of Minnesota for nearly four years. He has made many friends and some political enemies in his own party. He is of the aggressive type, a man of strong personality, and there was no power-behind-the-throne pull in his administration. Whatever he did he had the frankness and the courage to stand by his acts without excuse or equivocation. When it came to doing business for the people, Minnesota never had a more efficient man in the governor's chair than Dave Clough. His handling of the soldiers and the protection of the settlers from danger at the time of the Leech Lake trouble was all that could be desired. His appointments as a whole have been creditable, and his whole administration has been business-like and honest. After the spirit of political bitterness engendered during the last campaign has passed away, it will be generally admitted that D. M. Clough made an excellent chief executive.—St. Cloud Journal-Press.

THE VERDICT.

Dayton was a tough town. They were working on the railroad—the railroad that never was finished. If they had finished that railroad, Dayton would have been a metropolis today—according to the Dayton belief.

Boney Walker, a grader, was up before the justice of the peace, charged with assault with intent to kill. There was no other kind of assault in Dayton in those days. It was not such a very serious charge either, but there were circumstances connected with this particular case which made it a matter of interest to the whole community. In the first place no one except a tenderfoot would ever have brought such a charge against a reputable citizen. There were other ways of settling matters of dispute which custom had made the rule, and the people of Dayton disliked to see such a radical change.

Joe Perry, the tenderfoot who brought the charge, had been working for Walker for several months and had never been able to draw a cent of the wages due him. Not only that, but he had loaned Walker nearly every cent he had in the world, and the outlook ahead of him was mighty blue. He had lived on frijoles and wormy bacon and slept on the ground when he was out on the grade and camped in the corral when he was in town. And all the time he had been writing back east to his folks, telling them that he liked the west—it was such a free and easy life, and the people were so hospitable and easy to get along with, and his health was better. It was all a bluff of course.

Walker was standing in front of the postoffice one day when Perry came out with a letter in his hand and a suspicious moisture in his eyes. The letter was from home. His mother was not as well as usual, the letter said, and things were not going on as smoothly as they might. It wound up by asking if he could not send a few dollars, as money was badly needed to buy her the little comforts that a sick person wants.

Perry plucked up courage, and, approaching Walker, asked him for some money. Walker pulled his revolver and struck the rash young man a vicious blow on the head. That was his reply—a characteristic one indeed. It was, in fact, such a natural thing for Walker to do that the people of Dayton were surprised greatly to learn that a warrant had been issued even.

It must be understood that Walker had a big contract with the railroad company and was in debt to everybody in the town. If he could keep going until the bonds were sold in the east, he and his creditors both stood a chance to get their money. To ask him for money now was, of course, an insult. What else could it be? But perhaps the tenderfoot didn't know that.

Justice of the Peace Smith was not only one of Walker's heaviest creditors, but he was on his bond also.

Walker wouldn't listen to reason at all. He was guilty, he insisted, and glad of it. Even when he was quite sober, early in the morning, he was defiant and stoutly maintained that he would have to plead guilty. So Justice of the Peace Smith took him off to one side and talked to him.

"Look here, Boney," he said, "don't throw us all down like this. Suppose I have to send you up; where are we going to get out? You'll lose the contract, and we'll lose our money. Never mind your reputation. Stand by your friends."

But Boney was obstinate and still insisted that he was obliged to plead guilty.

For the better accommodation of the jury and the rest of Walker's creditors, court was held in the old warehouse between the cabinet and the brewery. The judge read the charge, with a tinge of sarcasm in his voice, which he with difficulty managed to conceal. The defendant waived counsel, and the trial proceeded.

"Guilty or not guilty?" asked the court.

The prisoner jumped to his feet. "Guilty!" he shouted. "And I'm sorry I didn't"—

The court interrupted him. "The prisoner pleads not guilty," the court said in blandest tones, not looking at the prisoner, however. "The jury is instructed to bring in a verdict in accordance with this evidence."

The prisoner sat speechless for a brief time. He was overcome with violent emotion.

"You're a liar!" he shouted, getting upon his feet at last. "I said, 'Guilty!'"

The court was entirely unmoved. Doubtless it was prepared for some such outbreak upon the part of the prisoner. "The jury will now retire and prepare its verdict," the justice said calmly.

In the poker room in the rear of the cabinet the jury deliberated over its verdict. The expense was borne by the court, who had accompanied the jury there.

Amid an impressive silence, so deep that the rattle of the dice in the cabinet, where the Frenchies were shaking, could be distinctly heard, the jury took their places again.

"Gentlemen, have you the verdict?" calmly asked the court as he resumed his chair, raised above the others by the aid of two soap boxes.

"We have," responded Big Casey, the foreman.

"Read it," commanded the court, assuming an expectant air, calculated to dispel any suspicion that the court itself might have been the real author of the document.

Big Casey read the verdict. It was as follows: "The jury finds that the prisoner is such a fearful liar that we cannot believe him under oath. It accordingly finds him not guilty."

The court then solemnly discharged the 12 creditors of the prisoner from further duty, and the incident was closed.—W. O. Hogaboom in Argonaut.

Sir John Lubbock's Pet Wasp.

Perhaps the strangest pet ever kept by man was a wasp which Sir John Lubbock caught in the Pyrenees and resolved to tame. He began by teaching it to take its meals on his hand, and although the tiny creature was at first shy of going through its table d'hote on such an unusual festive board, in a very short space of time it grew to expect to be fed in that way. Sir John preserved this pet with the greatest care. True, it stung him once, but then it had every excuse for doing so. Sir John was examining it on a railway journey, and the door being opened by a ticket collector he unceremoniously stuffed it into a bottle, and the outraged Spaniard, not feeling quite at home during the process, gave him a gentle reminder as to the proper way to treat a guest.

The wasp was a pet in every sense of the word and became so fond of its owner that it allowed itself to be stroked. It enjoyed civilization for just nine months, when it fell ill, and although Sir John did all he could to prolong its life it died. Many wasps have been under Sir John's observation, but he has never had such a genuine pet as this one.—London Chums.

Shevlin and others interested in the St. Hilaire and Crookston Lumber Co.'s, the lumber cut by these two mills the coming season will be marketed entirely from Crookston, the selling offices being combined at Crookston. This move is in the line of modern consolidation for economy's sake. The mill at Crookston is now being overhauled, the last remaining circular saw will be replaced by a band saw, and the mill will be made as good as new from top to bottom The combined cut of the mills will be not far from 80,000,000 feet the coming season. Both mills have an abundance of logs in pond to begin work on as early as the temperature will permit, and a good stock of logs in the woods it a certainity.—Minneapolis Lumberman.

Harry to the Rescue.

We take the following from the Crookston Times of last Friday:

"Harry Ives came down from St. Hilaire last night and proceeded to St. Paul where he will spend a few days watching legislative proceedings. He will make an effort to induce the Great Northern to restore daily service on the St. Hilaire line, and to that end will lay the case before the railway commission."

Died of Heart Disease.

The News was mistaken as to the cause of Mrs. Wm. Lennon's death, which was recorded in this paper last week. Death was caused from heart disease, and she was only sick a very short time. She had been constantly improving in health since leaving this city last summer, and was considered entirely well.

A FIGHT

Between Two Red Lake Agency Residents.

The report comes from the Red Lake Agency of a bloody battle fought between two of its residents last week. The participants, were J. H. Brown, an Indian who is teacher in the schools, and Amos Bigbird, the government blacksmith. Just what started the row seems to be an uncertainity, but as to who was victorious there is no doubt. Brown was beaten over the head by the blacksmith, who used a club, and was rendered unconscious for several hours, in fact it was feared he would not recover. Bigbird was arrested and fined by the Agency authorities. Brown has resigned his position as teacher in the schools, and it is said that Bigbird will be discharged.

That's the Way the Train Will Run on This Branch.

Owing to the small amount of business anticipated by the Great Northern during the coming few months, the train service on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays has been discontinued. The road has been doing a flourishing business on this branch during the past few months and many car loads of wheat, lumber and live stock have been shipped out of Red Lake county. A daily train will be put on again when the rush of spring business opens up.

A PAPER MILL

Looking for Another Location in the Northwest.

The following telegram was sent to the Minneapolis Times by its Washington correspondent. Thief River Falls could offer unexcelled inducements to an institution of this kind, and it would be a good idea for the business men to open up a correspondence. The Times' item is as follows:

"If any enterprising Minnesota town surrounded by timber and water, wishes the location of a pulp and paper mill, it has the opportunity. David L. Luke, of the West Virginia Pulp and Paper company at Luke, near Cumberland, Md., said his company had decided to seek another location for its mill and probably would go to the northwest. The reason for removal is that the company is tired of the litigation over the polluting of the Potomac river."

How Advertising Pays.

That advertising pays has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of an Iowa girl. She advertised for a husband and got one. The ad. and wedding expenses footed up to $12.40. After a year he was glad to go to war. He was killed in battle. The wife gets $5,000 life insurance and a widow's pension. What more could she expect in one year on an investment of $12.40?

A Dog that Travels.

Chas. Tedford possesses one of the brightest dogs in this section. The dog has not yet forgotten his old St. Hilaire associates and on pleasant days takes the train to St. Hilaire, returning on the train the next day. The dog is a favorite with the railroad men and never buys a ticket.

TWO SURPRISES

One on Mr. and Mrs. Dobner, Another on Mr. and Mrs. Zeh.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Dobner were very pleasantly surprised last Thursday evening by a number of friends, the occasion being the second anniversary of their marriage. The evening was very pleasantly spent in card playing, after which refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Dobner were presented with a present by the guests, as a token of the esteem in which they are held. Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames, F. J. Stebbins, H. Lewin, John Moylan, O. P. Johnson, C. J. Knox, J. Borry, John W. Eastman, Emil Zeh and Dr. and Mrs. Grandy.

Another surprise party was given Tuesday evening upon Mr. and Mrs. Emil Zeh. The evening was very pleasantly spent in card playing. Mr. and Mrs. Zeh were presented with a handsome rocking chair by the guests. Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames, H. Lewin, J. Borry, K. M. Hansen, James Meehan, Jr., C. L. Dobner, F. J. Stebbins, Milton Forder, O. P. Johnson, C. J. Knox and John W. Eastman.

LOCK AND DAM

May Be Put in at the Red Lake Outlet.

Washington, Jan. 9.—This week will be devoted by the committee on rivers and harbors to and executive session for the purpose of framing their bill. Minnesota, so the members believe, will fare pretty well. A provision will be made, it is believed, for the reconstruction of Leech Lake and Winnebigoshish reservoirs at a cost of $200,000; and for surveying overflow land $30,000 is required. The Indians have already been paid for portions of those lands and the government proposes to through open such purchased lands as have become valuable. At least $150,000 will be secured for locks and dams. The work on the Mississippi is reported to be well under way between Minneapolis and St. Paul. There may also be an appropriation for the Red Lake river above Crookston, the plan being to place locks and dam at the outlet of Red Lake. The prospects are that lock and dam work will be placed under the continuous contract system. It is also reported to substitute stone and cement construction of reservoirs in place of wooden material used heretofore.

A LAWYER'S STORY.

"Great Scott! What's this? Looks mightily as though the world came near having to get along without me. Must be a story here."

"Of course there is. Don't you know that an old family lawyer is the greatest depository on earth for stories? He knows far more about the ins and outs of real life than either the doctor or the preacher."

"But did my parents actually agree to separate as this document would indicate?"

"Precisely. Don't you recognize the signatures? I forgot that the agreement was there when I allowed you to go through those old files. It happened a long time ago, you know. But the facts are a good deal less serious than your imaginings would probably be."

Because of some memory the old lawyer dropped into a reverie and had to be prompted before proceeding.

"Let's see, where was I? Oh, yes—well, they were married and settled down to farming. When you come to review the case dispassionately, they never had any real trouble. In my opinion she was given to talking too much perhaps. On the other hand, he was too taciturn. She spoke when silence would have been better, and he was silent when it would have been promotive of peace for him to speak.

"When you come to review the bare testimony, it seems almost incredible that they should have ever thought of parting. But what may seem trifles count for a great deal in this world. Besides, words repeated do not convey the thoughts, the tones and the looks that accompany them.

"One article of their household outfit was a bright tin milking pail with a strainer attached. She liked to see it hanging up as a kitchen ornament, but without consulting her he appropriated it to milk in. She sharply told him not to do so again and added quite a volunteer little discourse on the rights of a woman in running her household affairs. That was where she talked too much. He said nothing by way of explanation or conciliation. That is where he talked too little.

"Later the same evening they disagreed on the subject of predestination, one greatly discussed at that time, and next morning he used the tin milk pail again. Then she not only reprimanded him, but laid line upon line and precept upon precept till he left in silent disgust.

"Your father was very fond of dogs and had a fine one of the Newfoundland breed. The dog and his master both detested cats. Your mother was particularly partial to cats and had no earthly use for dogs. She could keep no cat because the dog would not permit it, and this afforded another bone of contention. They failed to agree as to the amount of work they should do on Sunday, and she talked about it while he declined to talk, and his silence was construed as sullenness. Meantime the tin pail was driving them apart. A tin pail is a small thing in itself, but so is an apple, and you know how it figured in an episode that placed the trail of the serpent over us all.

"One evening he sat down to mend some harness in front of the sitting room grate where she was knitting, and she informed him that the proper place for such odoriferous employment was in the kitchen. Then it was that he calmly suggested that they did not seem adapted to each other, and that it would probably be best for them to live apart after dividing their possessions. She sarcastically stated that they were at length in accord as to one thing and dropped stitches while he jammed the awl into his thumb.

"Then she delivered quite an opinion on the subject of divorce, holding that the only right thing for them to do was to separate, the marriage bond remaining unimpaired. Again they agreed. He said that they would better proceed with as little notoriety as possible and asked what she thought of me as a man to divide the property. She thought I would be fair, and that was all she wanted.

"Both lay awake most of the night. Both would have liked to escape the impending crisis. But both were proud. In the morning he couldn't go to see me because there was the balance of the corn to husk, he said, and then he went to do the milking in a wooden pail.

"She announced the next morning that it would be impossible for her to leave home because the cream would spoil if she did not churn and get the butter ready for market. Then she patted the dog. He looking as mutely surprised as did your father. The next day they came, for neither had an excuse for not coming, and told me to draw up the agreement of separation. I could see that neither wanted it, but direct interference on my part would have been fatal, so I wrote that paper, and they signed it.

"Then came the division of property. There were five cows, and each insisted that the other must have three. This showed a tenderness that did not comport with their action, but I kept right on doing business. She could outtalk him and he finally consented to take the three cows, mentally resolving to drive one over to her father's barn, when she was settled at home again. They could agree as to nothing, each wanting the other to have the lion's share, and they really grew affectionate in their protests. Then the iron was hot and I struck, telling them to go home, adjust their differences and live happily, as it was meant they should. He said that they had agreed to take me as their adviser, and he would not go back on his word. She looked pretty as a bride when she smilingly admitted that a bargain was a bargain with her, and they went out happier than the day they were married. He made only two purchases that day. One was a tin milk pail with a polished copper strainer and the other was a big maltese cat.

"There's no nicer or more contented old couple in the whole state, and if I were you I would just burn that paper and never say a word about it. It records a tragedy that never came off."—Detroit Free Press.

A Shrewd Woman.

When Jornerby comes home late, he receives a lecture from Mrs. J. of such length and strength that he is pretty certain to stay out later the next night. When Hollister, on the contrary, arrives at his domicile at an untimely hour, Mrs. Hollister smiles sweetly as she says: "How fortunate, Charles! To be sure, you are a little late for dinner, but you are in admirable time for breakfast. You must be hungry, dear, so I'll set about getting it at once." Next evening Hollister reports at an early hour. Mrs. Hollister understands man nature much better than Mrs. Jornerby does.—Boston Transcript.

MISPLACED FAITH.

"But don't you think you are reposing too much confidence in him, Bertha?" said Mrs. Portman to her friend Bertha Baker.

The pretty young widow laughed and shook her head.

When Gerald Montressor proposed to Bertha Baker, a wealthy young widow with two children, she burst into tears and murmured something about "not being good enough for him!"

Miss Johnson, the governess of little Blanche and Bessie, clasped her hands in delight when Bertha told her of her engagement.

"He's such a darling man!" said Miss Johnson.

So the big wedding cake was made, and the white silk dress was ordered, and the clergyman engaged to perform the ceremony, when a telegram arrived from Europe demanding Mrs. Baker's instant presence at the deathbed of her only brother.

"You surely will not think of going, Bertha!" pleaded the bridegroom elect.

"I shall go," Mrs. Baker answered quietly. "It is a duty from which I may not shirk."

And she went, resolutely refusing the escort of Mr. Montressor, "because," she said, "I would rather know that my little ones are safe under your fatherly care."

Before she sailed, however, she made a will, leaving her children, her property, her all, to the guardianship of Gerald Montressor, and thereby arose the remark which opens our tale.

Three or four weeks glided away before a second telegram was handed into the Gothic furnished library of the house on Patrician square where Mr. Montressor was reading the paper aloud to Miss Josepha Johnson:

I sail in the San Duomo April 21. Love to all.
B. B.

And while the upholsterer's men were tacking down the pale blue velvet carpet in the bride's boudoir the sad tidings came of the foundering of the good steamer San Duomo and the loss of all on board.

The little children stared in bewilderment at their black frocks and wide black sashes.

"The Lord's will be done," groaned Mr. Montressor.

"We must strive to be resigned," said Miss Josepha Johnson.

It was a sunbright morning toward the 1st of June. Mrs. Portman was watering the monthly roses and geraniums in her windows, when there came a soft tapping at the door.

"Come in," said Mrs. Portman, and straightforward a ghost glided in.

Or at least so she thought. It was Bertha Baker, the woman whom they all believed to be shrined in coral at the bottom of the Atlantic.

"Don't be frightened, Mrs. Portman," said Bertha. "It's only I. I didn't sail in the Duomo after all. A little extra law business that I hadn't anticipated kept me until the next steamer. I was so vexed, but I'll never grumble again. It was the saving of my life. And now tell me about the children—about Gerald.

Mrs. Portman's spectacles glared upon the inquiring face of the young widow.

"Is it possible," she asked, "that you haven't been there?"

"I wanted to hear something of their welfare first. I wanted to surprise them."

"And I guess you will surprise them," said Mrs. Portman. "Haven't you heard?"

"Heard what?"

"Why," said Mrs. Portman, with a roguish twinkle in her eyes, "Mr. Montressor thought it was a great pity the wedding cake and the dress and the veil should all be wasted, so he is to marry that precious Miss Josepha Johnson of yours the day after tomorrow."

"Impossible!" gasped Bertha. "And the children!"

"Oh, the children! They are a secondary consideration," said Mrs. Portman dryly. "They are to be packed off to a boarding school, for Miss Josepha Johnson has had quite enough of them already, and Mr. Montressor isn't fond of children now that their mother's eye is off him and the property is in his own control."

Mrs. Baker's lips were compressed.

"The man is a false villain!" she cried.

"Just exactly what I've always thought myself," retorted Mrs. Portman, "but you wouldn't believe a word of it!"

"Let us go to them at once," cried Mrs. Baker, the fitful color coming and going in fever flushes on her cheek. "The idea of sending my children away to boarding school—my little pet lambs!"

Miss Josepha Johnson was trying on the wedding dress in Mrs. Baker's own bedroom when the doorbell rang.

"It'll do pretty well," said Miss Johnson, "although I should have preferred white satin with sprays of orange blooms all around the hem of the veil, and—do get out of the way, Blanche and Bessie, you little bothering plagues, or I'll slap your faces!"

"No, you will not," said a soft, firm voice close beside her. "Take off that dress at once and then take yourself out of my house!"

Miss Josepha Johnson gave an eldritch screech of terror and dismay.

"I thought you were drowned!" she screamed.

"I am as alive as yourself," said Bertha calmly, and then, followed by Mrs. Portman, she walked down stairs into the drawing room, where Mr. Montressor was leisurely reading the paper.

"Is that you, my darling Josepha?" he asked without turning his head. "Come here and give your own Jerry a kiss."

Mrs. Baker bit her lip.

"You are under a mistake, Mr. Montressor," said she. "You and your darling Josepha may clear out as soon as you please!"

"Bertha!" Mr. Montressor's classic jaw fell, his eyes expanded. "Bertha! Alive and well! Has Providence worked a miracle!"

"Exactly!" said Mrs. Baker. "Providence has revealed to me the real character of those in whom I trusted so implicitly—something little short of a miracle!"

Mr. Montressor lost his rich wife, but Miss Josepha Johnson did not gain a husband. She is an old maid still, for "that dear man" had too much common sense to throw himself away on a homeless governess. And Bertha Baker still remains a widow, devoted to Blanche and Bessie. —Exchange.

BROOD SOWS.

Suggestions In Regard to Their Proper Care.

The proper care of brood sows, writes A. N. Springer in Land and a Living, is very essential to a successful swine breeder. Without it, it is impossible to have pigs mature enough to dispose of at the age of 6 or 8 months. With it, as has been demonstrated time and again, it is readily done. The care of the sow must begin at the beginning, and it stands to reason that a gilt from a sow that has had proper care and food will be a better individual than one from a dam that has not had the best of care. Though their treatment is the same from pigs up, there will be a difference more or less plainly to be seen in favor of the former.

Sows should never at any time be allowed to get poor, but should always be kept in good flesh. Neither should they be fat—that is, in marketable condition. A sow fed to this degree of fatness cannot be a first class mother; her superabundance of fat will render her clumsy if nothing more. Her food, then, should be mostly such as tends to promote the growth of bone and muscle. The above mentioned kind of food should predominate at all times unless it be for a short period after weaning the pigs. If, as it sometimes happens with the best of care and intentions, a sow gets below the normal in flesh, then it would be necessary to increase the flesh or fat forming foods until she has regained her proper amount of fat.

Care must be exercised at all times when a change in food is made, as there in lies a very great danger. A too sudden change and an excess of feed will very often play sad havoc with one's plans. Make haste slowly in changing food. Sows due to farrow in the fall should be fed very sparingly of green corn. Some oats and milk and grass should be their principal feed. Where they are not due to farrow until well along in October the corn can be fed with less danger, always providing one exercises the proper amount of caution in beginning as to amount fed. A good, dry, warm shelter is necessary for this time of year for the welfare both of sow and prospective litters.

Effects of Horseshoeing.

The effects of horseshoeing upon the legs of horses, says the London Live Stock Journal, is a subject which obtains too little attention. In America it apparently obtains too much, for there the trainers and farriers seem to imagine that they can correct every imaginable fault of action or conformation by fanciful kinds of shoes. It is questionable if very much harm or good can be done to the limbs of adult horses. The joints and ligaments of the adult are so firmly set that the effect of uneven bearings of shoes or uneven foot surfaces are spent upon the coronet and pastern joints. With young horses, and more especially foals, whose tissues are soft and plastic, the foot reacts distinctly and rapidly upon the limb. Straight pasterns may be made worse by allowing the heels of the hoof to remain too high, while excess of slope in these bones may be exaggerated by permitting the toe to grow too long. Unequal height of the sides of the hoof affects the leg, and twisting of the fetlock joints follows. It is said that by using shoes made higher on one side of the foot than on the other this twisting action may alter the conformation of the limb as high up as the knee and hock. If this be so, a farrier artist might so modify the legs of foals as to prevent calf knees, bowlegs and cow hocks. The reactions of disproportionate feet do not require shoes to produce them. The irregular growth of the hoof when unshod is capable of injuring the formation of the leg, and even if a breeder is not skilled enough to artificially correct the faults of limb in his stock he may always take care no harm is done. He may occasionally look to the feet and see that they are kept fairly proportionate.

Preventing Wool From Shrinking.

It is a well known fact that chlorine has the effect of preventing wool from felting. It would therefore presumably prevent wool fabrics from shrinking, for it is the felting property of wool that brings about the shrinkage during washing operations. A solution of three pounds of bleaching powder for each 100 pounds weight of wool is made and the goods rapidly immersed in this bath. After remaining in about 10 to 15 minutes they are taken out, put into a bath of hydrochloric acid of 2 degrees for ten minutes, and then thoroughly washed. It is not advisable to use more than three pounds of bleaching powder, or otherwise the goods will be yellowish in color and have a harsh feel.—Popular Science.

Shorthorns For the General Farmer.

I do not assert that the Shorthorns are the only breed that have a place in this country, but I do affirm that they have a place that cannot be filled by any other breed. By the general farmer we do not mean the gardener or dairy man living near a large city, neither do we refer to the ranchman, but the man with 100 acres of land, situated several miles from market. He does not make a specialty of any one thing, but feeds his lands by a rotation of crops. He keeps just such stock as will consume his own productions of hay, fodder and grain.—C. C. Shaw in National Stockman.

Feed For Ewes In Winter.

In winter I do not like to keep my ewes that are going to raise lambs chiefly on corn. I feed one part corn, two parts oats and two parts bran, with all the clover hay they can eat. If you have not clover hay to feed your sheep this coming winter and are going to compel them to eat timothy hay, you would better have shot them when the winter commenced rather than see them die after you have brought them through to the spring. You must be careful on this line. Of course corn fodder is good for sheep, next to clover hay.—S. H. Todd.

GOSSIP

Of a Political Nature from the State Capitol.

For nearly forty years the Republican party has governed this state and has created and fostered the institutions under which we have prospered. The Democrats and Populists have harped upon mismanagement of state affairs and political corruption until one of their number has been placed by the people in the governor's chair. He stands pledged to ferret out this alleged corruption and to remedy it—to show the people of the state, not by mere assertions, as during the campaign, but by proofs, how the tax payer has been robbed and how the various departments of state have been mismanaged and at the same time to so alter the existing order of things as to do away with the evils for which the Republican party is said to be responsible. It will not do for Mr. Lind and his party to let any apportunity go by to prove their campaign statements.

Leading Republicans who visit the capital are all of the opinion that in the campaign of 1900 the party present a more solid and unconquerable phalanx than ever before. The loss of the head of the ticket has taught that a nomination does not necessarily mean an election and that perfect harmony within the ranks of the party is indispensible to success. In the nomination of a ticket personal interests will be lost sight of and Republican victory be the only consideration. This is as it should be, and if the plan is carried out it cannot fail of success.

* * *

If you will carefully read State Auditor Dunn's report and the report of the commissioner of labor, which were both in the hands of Gov. Lind before he submitted his message, you will find that they furnished the executive with his best and most practical recommendations. Mr. Lind is wise enough to accept even the recommendations of the departments which his party has so abused.

* * *

Anyone who compares Gov. Lind's message with his Minneapolis speech will be forcibly struck by the difference between Mr. Lind's pre-election and post-election utterances. It is evident that before election he had not studied the condition of our state institutions and he supposed there were many abuses. After election he has looked up the facts and he finds no abuses.

* * *

These utterances of Gov. Lind in his inaugural message do not go to show that the Republicans have run our institutions in the ground during their forty years' administration:

"The educational interests of the state have kept pace with the other factors in their growth and development in a most gratifying degree, as it appears by the report of the superintendent of public instruction, which, with the recommendations therein contained, I commend to your attention."

"Our university has continued to prosper. All the colleges embraced in it are making laudable progress in the extent and methods of their work."

"The management of the state prison shows most gratifying results."

Taking the message as a whole it is an endorsement of Republican government in this state.

The alleged abuses in grain inspection and in the sale of prison twine will be fully investigated by the legislature to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charges that have been made along these lines. Every Republican member of the legislature favors throwing the legislative search lights into any department against which charges have been made by the Fusionists and if evils are discovered to remedy them by immediate and salutary legislation. Those who advanced these charges of incompetency and dishonesty during the campaign will thus be afforded an opportunity to be heard and it is to be hoped they will take advantage thereof. It may be stated, incidentally, that interest in these investigations has decreased since Gov. Lind failed to show up any existing wrongs, but they will, nevertheless, be undertaken and vigorously prosecuted.

* * *

The Republican members of the legislature realise fully the importance of keeping their eyes open and preventing bad legislation. The minority in both houses will be more active the present session than for many years past, owing to the fact that they are backed by a chief executive of their own political faith. It seems likely that party lines will therefore be drawn more or less closely in matters of legislation. In the organization of the legislature the minority carried out a well defined program and cast their complimentary votes for candidates of their own party. Whether any effort will be made to attempt legislation that would be detrimental to Republican success two years hence is yet to be learned. The Republicans have no wish to draw party lines sharply unless forced to do so by the opposition. There has been some talk among Republican members of appointing a steering committee and this may be done a little later in the session, but that will have no special political significance. It will simply be for the purpose of encouraging good and weeding out bad legislation.

* * *

The inaugural message of Gov. Lind to the legislature was a sore dissappointment to his followers. They had expected a "red hot" message with partisan arraingment of Republican administration and recommendations for radical changes in the manner of conducting affairs of state. The message failed to reveal any one instance where the Republican party of this state had been guilty of mismanagement, notwithstanding the fact that the document had been prepared after a thoroug and searching inquiry into the various departments by the new governor. It failed to show abuses in the grain inspection and in commenting upon the grain and warehouse commission he said that no new laws were necessary in this department. Nor did the message throw any unfavorable light on the sale of prison twine. It is fair to suppose that if Mr. Lind had found any particular cause for complaint he would not have hesitated to say so.

* * *

The recommendations of Gov. Lind to manufacture dairy supplies at the state prison and to sell the same to farmers at cost in order to break up the trust on dairy supplies, at least as far as this state is concerned, would be a very good thing except for one big "if." Almost everything but butter tubs is covered by patents and the state would not have a right to manufacture patented articles any more than individuals. This recommendation was warmly received as it should have been "if" the scheme had been practical. The dairy supplies which are latest and most practical are, as a rule, recent inventions and the life of a patent is eighteen years.

* * *

Gov. Lind will undoubtedly realize to a marked degree the truth of the assertion that patronage is a source of strength. If there were offices enough to go around it would be all right, but when there are innumerable candidates for every appointive position the distribution of patronage is sure to lead to trouble. For every man that the governor can let into his plum orchard there will be scores of disappointed office seekers outside, angry because they have not been let in and envious of those who have been favored. How many of these will be carrying knives up their sleeves will be learned two years hence.

Fun For Reds.

The Chippewa Indians at War Road, on Lake of the Woods, with their friends from abroad to the number of 500, have just concluded their annual dance, which lasts a week. One day each was given up to the speech dance, squaw dance and give-away dance, the intervening days being spent in feasting. The Indians had a royal time, and their speeches expressed the warmest friendship for the white people and especially the people of War Road, for the kind treatment extended to them. The dances were much enjoyed by the Indians and no disturbance of any kind occured.

It's Not So.

The gang in the St. Hilaire Lumber company's mill has been removed to Crookston.—Thief River Falls News.

There is a mistake somewhere, no machinery has been taken out of our mill, but as a matter of fact, after the 15th inst., repairs will be made and new machinery put in.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Some County Records for 1898.

During 1898, 1,183 instruments were recorded in the register of deeds' office of Red Lake county.

Clerk of Court Perrault issued 7 citizen's first papers, 191 second papers and 65 marriage licenses.

67 full grown wolves and 68 cubs were killed in Red Lake county, for which the county paid $437.00. Two-thirds of this is repaid by the state.

INDIAN TIMBER

May Be Disposed of in a Different Way.

Washington, Jan. 16.—Indian Commissioner Jones has submitted an important amendment to the senate committee on Indian affairs, now considering the Indian appropriation bill, with reference to the disposal of the timber question on the White Earth and Red Lake reservations. The amendment proposes that the pine on the lands under the jurisdiction of the Indian office shall be cut and disposed of at the option of the Indian commissioner, under the direction of the secretary of the interior. The amendment is important for the reason that if adopted it will result in a radical change in the method of cutting timber on the diminished Chippewa reservations, as it is known that Commissioner Jones does not approve of the system. Commissioner Jones is favorably impressed with the policies of the disposition of Indian timber in vogue on the reservations in Wisconsin. On the Menomonie reservation in that state timber is cut by the Indians, banked and sold on government scale to the highest bidder. On the reservations of the La Ponte agency, on Lake Superior, the system is to authorize mill men to put up mills on the reservation and employ Indian labor in logging and manufacturing the lumber on the reservation. This system has been successful, especially in developing Indian labor, that the Indian office claims that 83 per cent of labor employed in the woods and around the mills on the La Ponte reservation is Indian labor. The purpose of the Indian office being not only to give the best possible results to the Indians in respect to the net proceeds to be derived from the timber operations, but also to give the Indians employment, the officials favor the plan for manufacturing on the reservation although the Menomonie system of logging and selling on the bank of the highest bidder is also popular.

A bill is now pending in the house, introduced by Representative Eddy, the purposed of which is similar to the amendment suggested by Commissioner Jones. It provides, however, that the cut shall be limited each season.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Good Reading for Red Lake County Commissioners.

We are gratified to state that every county in the Seventh congressional district is paying legal rates for its county printing this year, with the exception of Clay, where it has not been let yet. It is gratifying to see the editorial profession acquiring some sense, and there is no kicking on the part of the people.—Fergus Falls Journal.

The McKinley club of Crookston is going to celebrate Lincoln's birthday.

Nelson Dingley, for many years a member of congress from Maine and chairman of the ways and means committee, died last week.

Let everyone interested in the future of Thief River Falls attend the meeting to be held in the Odd Fellows hall tomorrow evening.

When a man gets his feet in the Red Lake county public trough, and—in the interests of the dear tax payers whom he of course loves—wishes to get in deeper, it is time to shut down upon him.

Warden Wolfer, of the state prison, who received a very flattering offer from Connecticut to take charge of the prison in that state, will remain as warden at Stillwater. Gov. Lind has urgently requested him to remain and favors raising his salary. How does this compare with the howl raised against the prison management by Gov. Lind's party before election?

The Hubbard board of county commissioners let the county printing at one cent per folio. Red Lake county pays seventy-five cents for the same.—Red Lake County Courier.

Yes, and Red Lake county pays $800—which is an exorbitant salary—a year to its superintendent of schools. We know a thoroughly competent person who will do the work for $200.

The cost of maintaining the state government is about $3,000,000 per year and an effort is to be made to secure this amount without leving a state tax upon real estate. Auditor Dunn contends that the railroads should pay a tax to the state government of $2,700,000 a year, and that the other corporations be taxed $300,000, thus securing the necessary amount.

Should the gubenatorial nomination happen to go to Frank M. Eddy next year, there may be a pretty contest for his shoes between two senators from that district. E. A. Young, of Appleton, and C. P. Reeves, of Glenwood. Both have been frequently mentioned as Eddy's probable successor. Both are ambitious and good politicians, so the gossip may develop into something more substantial during the next few months.—St. Paul Dispatch.

One of the cardinal principles of the American Typographical Union is the charging of legal prices for official printing, in fact in many cities union men will not work upon newspapers that do work at a price lower than the law prescribes. The Red Lake county commissioners, however, call it monopoly when a bid is not put in at starvation prices. There is a great difference between monopoly and "scabbing."

The imports of foreign merchandise for the calendar year 1898 were less than for last ten years, while exports were the largest on record. The imports for 1898 were $100,000,000 less than those of 1897, $135,000,000 less than 1888 and nearly $50,000,000 less than 1894 and 1896, which were two years of great financial depression. The greater part of the imports were raw products, like coffee, tea, sugar, wool, hides, chemicals, rubber, silk, fibers and other articles not produced within the limits of the United States, for the use of our manufacturers, or for the consumption of the people.

Robert W. Olmsted, of Orange City, Iowa, makes a comparison between the number of trainmen on the railroads of the United States who were killed and injured during the last year and the number of soldiers who were killed, wounded or died of disease during the war. During the year ended June 30, 1898, 162,873 trainmen were employed. Of these 1,073 were killed while in the performance of their duty and 15,936 were injured, which gives a percentage of .0065 killed and .097 injured. The whole number of soldiers in the army did not at any time exceed 265,000. Of these 2,624 were killed or died of disease, which number was .0099 per cent of the whole, and 1,500 were wounded, which was .0058 per cent of the whole. In other words, one out of every 152 trainmen was killed and one out of every ten was injured, while in the army one soldier out of every 101 either was killed or died of disease, while one out of every 169 soldiers was wounded.

The Record and Union of Rochester, one of the ablest edited papers in southern Minnesota, which supported Bryan in 1896, in its last issue announced that hereafter it will "oppose the free silver doctrine to the best of its ability." On the other great issue it says: "As to the annexation question, the Record and Union stands squarely with the administration. The war with Spain was waged to free the Cubans from the almost inhuman persecutions under which they suffered. During the war the United States came in possession of the Philippines. To give them back to Spain would be to stultify the United States, for if the treatment of the Cubans was cruel, her treatment of the Filipinos was barbarous; and to give them back would be to say that cruelty in one part of the world must be stopped but is all right in another. We have got the islands. What the government of them will be congress will in its wisdom decide, and the Record and Union believes it will decide for the best. Even Mr. Bryan does not want them returned to Spain, but he offers no suggestion as to their future status. They will be given all the freedom and latitude their inhabitants are capable of enjoying but they will not be slaves or bondmen. Mr Bryan et al must formulate some other principles than the ones they are now exploiting before they can have a standing in this country."

A Surprise on Mr. and Mrs. Benzie.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Benzie were surprised by a number of their friends Tuesday night. The evening was spent in card playing, and N. W. Tarrant proved the most successful player and won the head prize. Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames Phil Zeh, Joseph Jerome, N. W. Tarrant, S. Bisazza, C. F. Cary and John Holzknecht and Misses Anna and Mary Schuser.

May Land It.

John Morgan, of St. Hilaire, we understand, stands an excellent show of being appointed executive agent of the state game and fish commission. He has the backing of H. E. Ives and other prominent Red Lake county fusionists. There is a salary of about $2,500 a year connected with the job and Mr. Morgan's many friends hope he will be successful.

After Gold and Diamonds.

An interesting account of the travels of C. D. Medberg, of Dexter, Minn., a nephew of Chief Benzie, of this city, appears in the last week's issue of the Mower County Transcript. Medberg is in South Africa exploring for diamonds and gold. He has apparently met with good success, but is now enroute to Alaska.

Trouble in the Pine Town.

Quite a tempest has been created among village authorities at Bemidji by the discovery that County Auditor Haner has refused to reorganize the village incorporation in making up the tax rolls for 1898 and has included only the bare townsite and an "addition" of forty acres in the village assessment roll. The matter is important in view of the issue by the village authorities for $7,000 in bonds for the water works purposes, as it will be impossible for the auditor to levy a tax for interest on the bonds until the expiration of two years.

AN OLD SETTLER

Was Mrs. S. T. Johnson who Died Monday.

Mrs. S. T. Johnson died Monday morning at 2 o'clock after a long illness. The deceased had been an invalid for years, and death was not unexpected. She was one of the pioneer settlers of this section, coming here with her husband in 1884. They resided upon a claim which they had taken a few miles north of this city a few years and then removed to this city where they have since resided. Mrs. Johnson was a devoted Christian, although her poor health would not allow her to take an active part in church work. She leaves a husband and a grandson, both of whom will have the sympathy of the public.

The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Methodist church, and the Rev. G. F. Liening, at the request of the deceased, officiated. The remains were interred in Greenwood cemetery.

Before the Commissioners.

The towns on the St. Hilaire branch of the Great Northern, situated in the northwestern part of the state, are making a vigorous attempt to have daily service reestablished.

About the first of the year the Great Northern took off three trains on this branch, so that the people received their mail only three times a week instead of daily.

The state railroad commission expected to hold a hearing in the case Tuesday morning, but the Great Northern sent word that General Superintendent Ward was still out on his annual inspection trip over the line and asked that the hearing be continued.

GOOD MOVE

A Commercial Club Organized in This City.

'NOTHER MEETING

To Be Held Tomorrow Evening in the I. O. O. F. Hall.

A mass meeting was held in the city hall last Friday evening, the purpose of which was to form an association of business men. There are many important things to be solved and it has for some time been considered advisable for the business men and tax payers to organize and deal intelligently with the different things.

The meeting was called to order by Mayor Dobner, who was made chairman, and Ira C. Richardson was elected secretary. A committee consisting of Matt Barzen, Ira C. Richardson and James Meehan, Jr., was appointed by the chair to draft articles of incorporation and by-laws, and an adjournment was taken until Monday evening.

At the meeting Monday evening the constitution and by-laws as reported by the committee were adopted with a few minor changes. The membership fee has been placed at $2, and the monthly dues will be 50 cents. The meeting was adjourned to meet Friday evening at the Odd Fellows at which time officers will be elected and it is hoped every tax payer and person intetested in the future of Thief River Falls will be present. It is of great importance that the attendance be large, so be sure to attend yourself and bring your neighbor.

A Strange Coincident.

A strange coincident is related by the Rev. G. F. Liening in connection with the burial of Mrs. S. T. Johnson. Eight years ago he conducted the services at the burial of Gould Johnson, an old soldier. Mr. Johnson was the first person ever buried in Greenwood cemetery, and although Rev. Liening has been a resident of this place a greater part of the time since then, the burial of Mrs. S. T. Johnson, who is an old soldier's wife, is the second person the Rev. gentleman has buried in Greenwood cemetery.

AN OBLIGING GIRL.

"Wake up down thar!"

The voice of the driver brought the sleepers from dreamland with a start. They looked out into the somber shadows of a forest. The blinding glare of the open had been left behind.

"What's the matter, old man?" yawned the "drummer" lazily.

"Road agents!" was the laconic response. "Some swarmin up back uv us, an ther rest ambushed on erhead—leastways I s'pose so!"

"The devil you say!" exclaimed the New Yorker. "Let's make a fight of it!" And he pulled out a dainty little pearl handled 22 caliber revolver, the kind every well regulated traveler always buys at the store right across from the depot before starting for the "wild and woolly."

"Yer too old for toys!" reprovingly grinned the jehu. "Besides even if yer all had guns it wouldn't be no use. That's Wild Raven an his gang, an they never do bus'ness with less'n 20 men."

"Then I'm safe!" joyously cried the young woman of the party.

"Safe!" gasped the capitalist. "Why, I don't understand you"—

"Oh, yes. It's quite well known that Wild Raven never molests women, you know."

The acumen of the Scotch investor was the first to respond to the very trying situation. He took out his pocketbook and after carefully counting all the money in it made a note of the amount on his cuff with a blue pencil. Then he gave it to the young woman with a sigh that was almost a groan.

"If it winna fash ye owre mickle," he said, with gloom soaked voice, "A wud be greatly obleeged to ha' ye hide my siller aboot yir pairson until tha thievin chiels are weel awa'!"

The young woman looked at him quizzically for a moment and then burst into a laugh of unmixed merriment.

"Oh, do excuse me!" she apologetically pleaded, with streaming eyes, as she struggled to recover herself. "It seems such a joke! Why, certainly I'll take care of your money for you! The best care in the world!"

And again she fell to laughing even more heartily than before.

"A good idea!" murmured the Bostonian as he collected his money and valuables in nervous haste, "a very good idea! Beg pardon, but may I ask a similar favor, my dear young lady?"

"Me, too," broke in the Chicago "drummer," and without waiting for a "yes" or "no" he dumped a fat wallet and some finger rings into the blue serge lap so obligingly spread out for them.

Almost condescendingly the English tourist passed over his roll, while the dapper Gothamite tendered his watch and wallet with a killing little "thank you very kindly" smile.

"Will you please be so good?" deprecatorily asked the consumptive schoolteacher, producing his meager hoard and flushing painfully at its poor comparison with the rest.

"No, I won't!" was the cross response. Fun and smiles left the fair receiver's face in a flash, and she actually scowled with the firmness of her refusal—that is, if a pretty face can scowl.

"I'm sorry if I troubled you," the schoolteacher simply said, but his face went white and his lips quivered as he put the wallet back in his pocket.

"Awful nasty!" everybody thought, for out of all the six the teacher had been the only man to show her little courtesies and kindnesses on the journey, but then not a single soul as much as breathed so. Self preservation is the one law absolutely free from danger of infraction.

There was quite a heap of pocketbooks, purses, money, watches and rings in her lap at the end of the impromptu donation party, but the young woman tucked them all quickly and securely away in that mysterious manner known only to her sex and Chinamen, and, except for a slightly accentuated bust, the numerous additions made no change in her appearance.

The stage, that had been slowly moving along, suddenly stopped with a jerk. A band of horsemen came galloping up from behind, and five or six burly forms leaped out of the bushes in front. Strong hands threw the horses back on their haunches and keen knives cut the traces. One of the leaders reared and lashed out with its fore feet, barely missing one of the bandits. The man cursed energetically and, jerking the horse down again, slowly and with much heartiness kicked the poor beast in the ribs.

"I tell you thar ain't nothin in ther world more satisfyin than kickin a horse or a cow in ther ribs!" amiably remarked the driver. "Ther 'thunk, thunk' kinder makes a feller feel at peace with all ther"—

"Shut up!"

The gloomy menacing muzzles of three sawed off Winchesters presented themselves for his inspection, while the rest were poked in the windows for the delectation of the passengers. A lithe young giant with handsome, swarthy face, but half hidden by a mask, threw open the stage door with a savage bang.

"Tumble out and line up!" he roared in a voice that seemed to those he addressed far more terrible than the bull of Bashan's. "Did ye hear me?" Before the frightened travelers could move the young woman jumped up and leaped gayly to the ground.

"Never mind, Raven," she laughed, giving the masked giant a ringing kiss on his bearded lips. "I've got about everything worth taking! Honestly, too, for they gave it to me of their own accord."

And once again she burst into the merry laughter which had greeted the Scotchman's proposal that she take care of his money. The bandits all divined the joke, and the somber woods rang with hilarity.

"Well, I'm d——d!" gasped the driver. "Raven's wife!"

The rest couldn't even gasp.

The traces were mended, and the stage again rumbled on its way. A gentle breeze came up from the west. It blew the pale consumptive schoolteacher a theory kiss from the slim white finger tips of a blue gowned figure now far up the hillside. He leaned out of the window and, looking mistily back through a blur of grateful tears, waved farewell with his poor thin hands.—George E. Creel in New York Journal.

No Objections.

A short time ago a somewhat laughable incident took place in a church in the north of England. The minister after proclaiming the banns of matrimony between a young couple concluded by saying, "If there be any objections, they can now be stated."

A fashionable youth, an old admirer of the intended bride, noticing the eyes of a portion of the congregation fixed upon him, rose up and exclaimed, "I have no objection for my own part," to the astonishment of all about him, and resumed his seat as if he had done a mere formal piece of business.—London Tit-Bits.

A WOMAN HATER.

"Dannie, dear," said Mame, "I wants youse to swear on de good book not to disgrace de family while yer down in Cuby"—

"Wot," interrupted Dannie, "is youse givin me, Mame? Does youse t'ink I'm goin ter run from de bullets? Does youse t'ink"—

"No, no, dear," answered the girl. "It ain't dat. I knows you'll do yer duty in de scrap. Wot I fears are dem Spanish goirls. Youse know yer awful soft on wimmen, an wot I fears is dat you'll get sweet on one of dem dago goirls an marry her. Oh, Dannie, if youse brings any disgrace like dat on de name of Dugan de blow would all but kill mudder, an I'd never hold up me head ag'in. Promise dat you won't do it. Promise me on de book, Dannie."

Dannie gave the promise with a laugh and was rewarded with a sisterly kiss. An hour later he started on his journey to the seat of war.

* * *

During the first eventful hour of the battle at San Juan hill Dannie Dugan's life was twice saved by Cowpuncher Grimes.

"Grimesy, me boy, I'll never fergit youse for plunkin dat last dago who had de bead on me w'en me back was turned," said Dannie. "Yer a dead white guy an a bute at handlin a gun."

Before that historic day was three hours older a vagrant Mauser bullet tunneled its way through Cowpuncher Grimes' left side and gave Dannie an opportunity to show his gratitude. It was a nasty wound, and at first Mr. Grimes expressed the opinion that it would be best to leave him in the trenches.

"I guess I've made my last gun play," he said to Dannie. "The best thing you can do, old pal, is to shake my flipper and let me cash in."

"Cash in!" growled Dannie. "I'm a-goin ter carry yer back ter dem doctors an have 'em putty up dat hole in yer liver. Youse too good a partner for Dannie Dugan ter t'row down."

Grimes was in the hospital when Santiago surrendered, but a week later the surgeons decided that he was strong enough to make the journey to New York. Then it was that he sent for Dannie. When the latter materialized, the wounded trooper raised his head from the pillow and put out his hand.

"Dannie," he said, "they're goin to send us up to your town—to New York. You have been awful kind to me, and I want to square accounts somehow. I didn't know but what I might do something for you when I get back to God's country—tote a message up to your people or anything else."

"Grimesy, old pal," replied Dannie, "youse kin do me an awful good turn in old New York. You kin go ter my sister Mame an try an square me wid de family."

"Square you, Dannie?"

"Yes, square me. Youse see, it's like dis: Just before I left de folks Mame she gets me inter de front room, puts me flipper on de Bible 'an jollies me inter promisin dat I wouldn't get stuck on any of dese Spanish goirls down here. Well, say, whin I gave Mame me promise I'd never seen de little Spanish goirl wot I found a-moanin over her dead mudder out back of El Caney de udder mornin. Dere ain't no use of chewin de rag over it. De fact is dat I'm dead stuck on Marie, an as soon as dis scrap's finished I'm goin to take her to de church an get spliced. But, bully gee! I can't rest easy till I knows dat t'ings have bin squared wid me sister Mame, an youse be's de only guy as kin do it."

"Dannie, I reckon I'm what you easterners call a woman hater. I don't like the female breed, and it don't like me. I may make a mess of the job, but I'll do it. If I don't cash in before the transport gets to New York, I'll see your sister and try and square it. Here's my hand on it. Write me a letter to show her that I'm your pal."

There came a knock at the door of the Dugan flat, and Mame answered it. As she opened the door a tall, slender man in a faded uniform of blue staggered in and all but fell into her arms.

"For God's sake give me a glass of water, miss! I ran away from the hospital, and I'm nearly knocked out. If you are Dannie Dugan's sister Mame, read this letter. If"—

The wounded trooper never finished that speech. With a moan of pain he fell face downward on the floor. Mame called in Mickie and her mother. They laid their unconscious guest on the sofa, and while Mame bathed his fever heated brow with ice water her brother Mickie started on a still hunt for whisky. Old Mrs. Dugan said that it was a shame to sit by and let a man die without sending for a priest.

"The man ain't goin to die, mudder," exclaimed Mame. "See, he's comin to his senses now. Let's read de letter dat our Dannie sent by him."

She broke the seal and recognized her brother's handwriting.

After Mame had read the letter she took a second look at the man on the lounge. She saw that he was young and fairly good looking. Then she remembered that Dannie in his letter had said something about a bullet hole in Grimesey's side.

"Mudder," she cried, "he may be a woman hater an he mayn't have any manners, but he saved our Dannie from croakin, an it's only fair dat we should keep him right here an nurse him. Tell Mickie to go fer de doc."

"God knows," moaned Mrs. Dugan, "if de best we got ain't too poor for him. An only to t'ink de pity of such a handsome lad as dat a-gettin bullet holes in his sides an a hatin wimmen like a heathen. Mickie, dear, make haste fer de doctor."

* * *

One day last week this letter was sent by special delivery to Trooper Dugan in Santiago:

DEAR DANNIE—I have seen Mame and squared things for you. I'm thinking of settling here in New York. Tired of cow punching. Besides, Mame won't stand for me moving west. Your mother and all the folks send love. The hole in my side has healed nicely, and Mame says—oh, by the way, Mame's going to marry me Sunday after next! Send us your blessing. Yours, GRIMES.

P. S.—Dannie, dear, I'm jist addin a word to t'ank youse for sendin me de cow puncher wot hated wimmen. Give me love to de heathen what yer married, fer I'm dat happy dat I fergive yer both. As ever, MAME.

An Explanation.

"I wonder why it is that so many men of talents become sour and distrustful of their fellow creatures," mused the young woman.

"I suppose," replied Miss Cayenne, "it's because they are constantly subjected to such emotional extremes. They can never tell whether a caller is an autograph collector or a bill collector."—Chicago Chronicle.

A CHURCH LEGEND.

Peter Smitz, the worthy mayor of Aix-la-Chapelle, sat within his private chamber, deep in thought. He was brooding over the cathedral of Aix, which was but half finished, and there were no funds for its completion. His gloomy meditations were interrupted by his pretty daughter.

"What is it, Gertrude?" the father asked.

"Hendric wishes to speak with you," the maiden answered, her face as demure as though she knew not the quest upon which the young man came.

"Let him come in," the father said, and the daughter withdrew to make room for the flaxen haired youth.

Hendric Staufman was a goodly fellow, a little wild perhaps—but, then, he was the captain of the city guard, and much might be excused in a soldier who ventured blood and life as freely as though he had ample store of both.

The little fat mayor guessed the errand upon which the youth had come and was not sorry to have an opportunity to deliver his mind upon the matter.

Straight and bold was the speech of the soldier, like to the sword he wore, and the example of the warrior Alexander, who cut the Gordian knot with the edge of his own bright blade.

"Your daughter, worthy mayor," said the soldier briskly. "I love her and would ask your consent to woo her."

Now, although Peter Smitz had not the slightest intention in the world of favoring the suit of the young man, yet so versed had he become in the arts of diplomacy since his service as mayor that he did not openly tell the suitor that his suit was hopeless, but he returned an evasive answer.

"I have no objection against you, my gallant captain," the mayor said, caressing his fat chin and smiling upon the soldier as if he fully intended to say yes at once and have done with it, "but affairs of state require me to hesitate before deciding such a weighty matter. You know that our cathedral is unfinished, to the great scandal of our town."

"What has that to do with your daughter?" exclaimed the soldier in astonishment. "Surely you do not expect that she can aid in finishing it?"

The soldier's words gave rise to a bright idea in the mind of the mayor.

"Exactly!" he cried. "My daughter's husband must finish the cathedral."

"By my faith, then, she is apt to go husbandless for awhile!" the soldier cried bluntly as he withdrew.

The mayor chuckled with delight upon getting rid of his visitor so easily and immediately resumed his study of the surrounding country, planning how he might best attack the insolent neighbors who had dared to scoff at the unfinished church.

The soldier quitted the mayor's mansion in disgust, and as he walked down the street, brooding moodily over the utterly impossible condition that old Peter had imposed, he became conscious that there was a stranger gliding by his side.

Young Hendric glared at the stranger in wrath. He felt in the humor for a quarrel, and here was a chance.

The man was tall and thin, with a nose curved like an eagle's beak, deep sunken eyes glowing like balls of fire, a long, drooping mustache and a sneering smile, and he was wrapped from head to foot in a long black cloak. Upon his head he wore a little hooded cap and a single slender red feather curved in the air like a tongue of fire.

Hendric was hot with rage when he glanced at the stranger, and then all of a sudden he became as cold as ice.

"Our fat little mayor made strange conditions," quoth the stranger, his voice as metallic as the ring of steel upon steel.

Hendric could only stare, not speak!

"You see, I know all about it," the stranger continued, with a confident nod, "and I take quite an interest in your case. It is a shame that two young hearts should be kept from each other, and if you say the word I'm the man who will give you the maiden."

Hendric shivered, and as he glanced around to see if any one was near his gaze fell upon the unfinished cathedral.

The two had halted right in front of the ill fated church.

"There you are!" cried the stranger as he looked at the vast pile with the air of a man who considered himself a judge about such matters. "The finishing of that is but a mere trifle. I'll help you myself. It is a little out of my line to build churches, but opposition is the life of trade. I'll aid you, cheap. Just sign me this contract. The purport of it is that the first who shall enter by the open door when the cathedral is finished shall belong to me, skin and hair, body and soul."

As it is generally very easy in this world to give away what does not belong to us, Hendric gladly signed the contract, and then the dark stranger agreed to deposit a certain sum amply sufficient to finish the cathedral in a lonely spot upon the grounds belonging to Hendric's dead father, accompanied by a will purporting to be signed by the old man, bequeathing the money to his son. This was so arranged that none might have a suspicion as to who furnished the money.

All went well. Hendric found the money, devoted it to building the cathedral and married the girl. But before the cathedral was finished Hendric had confided to his wife the bargain he had made with satan, and she, womanlike, set her wits to work to cheat the fiend.

The contract stated that the first to enter should fall satan's prize, but did not stipulate whether that first should be human or beast.

And so the opening day came and a vast crowd assembled. Two men placed a large box close to the cathedral door, the portal was opened, the box was shattered and a huge wolf ran into the church at headlong speed.

The fiend in waiting gripped the beast fast, but when he saw how he had been tricked he vanished with a howl of rage. The contract had been strictly kept. The fiend had completed the cathedral.—New York News.

Reduction.

"How women change!" said the man who has been married a year. "My wife used to write to me and send me a bushel of kisses in her letters."

"Um," said the man who has been married a quarter of a century.

"But now when I leave for the office she just gives me a peck, and a short one at that."—Indianapolis Journal.

Fear and Bravery.

"There goes the bravest man in the army," said the old Kaiser Wilhelm on the battlefield of Sadowa, as a pale young officer cheered his men on to the charge. "He is terribly afraid of being shot, and he knows it, but he loves his duty and country more than his personal safety, and that is what makes him lead his men on so gallantly."

CITY FINANCES.

Not in a Promising Condition Just at Present.

The financial statement for the city of Thief River Falls has been prepared by the city clerk. It shows that the city's affairs are not conducted on as economical a basis as many would desire to see. The amount paid out in salaries to the various city officers amounts to a total sum of $2,622.72. Of this amount only $347.76 was expended upon the streets, and the remaining $2,274.96 was expended in unnecessary and exorbitant salaries. The amount expended in repairing the streets we think was also more than it should have been, when it is taken into consideration the fact that no permanent repairs were made. But it is the only way in which the tax payers at large receive any benefit and we do not believe there will be much objection to the street commissioner's bill.

The assetts of the city amount to $610.41, and the liabilities are $18,000. This does not show that the city is in very good shape financially, and we believe that economy should be practiced to a great extent. No city can succeed where the rate of taxation is high. It will drive away manufacturing institutions, besides giving the city a bad name. If the money was spent in improving and beautifying the city, it would not be so bad, but as it is at present we have nothing to show for it.

The revenues for 1899 are estimated to be $4,800.00, and the city council has figured upon spending $4,690.00 of it. If their estimates came true the city will have a balance of $110.00 left in the treasury at the end of the year. Perish the thought!

A Masquerade Ball.

A masquerade ball will be given at St. Hilaire on the evening of Feb. 11th. Four prizes will be given away. Tickets 50 for all. Masks can be secured at Mr. Hall's store, St. Hilaire. We extend an invitation to all Thief River Falls people.

DENTAL NOTICE.

Dr. Foster, the Grand Forks dentist, will be in Thief River Falls, Monday, Feb. 20 to remain five days. Strictly first-class dental work at moderate prices. Painless extraction of teeth. Office at Hotel Ogahmah.

Engineers and Surveyors.

Mr. George A. Ralph, city engineer, returned Tuesday morning from St. Paul where he has been in attendance at a meeting of the State Board of Engineers and Surveyors. Interesting and instructive papers were there read on good roads, bridges, best methods of drainage, etc. Mr. Ralph was appointed chairman of the committee on drainage and also chairman of the committee on legislation. The business of the committee will be to pursuade the legislature to create a board of examiners for engineering and surveying, similar to the board of dentistry and the medical board. If such a board existed it would prevent ill-qualified engineers and surveyors from doing work in the state.

An effort will also be made to have the state legislature send a memorial to congress asking that the balance of government surveying in the state be finished as soon as posible and the office of surveyor general be discontinued.

All survey work on the Red Lake reservation, Mr. Ralph says, has been let and will be completed next spring.—Crookston Journal.

Potts in Idaho.

Mrs. E. F. Marshall is in receipt of a letter from J. E. Potts, informing her that he has rented a large saw mill four and a half miles from Lewistown, Idaho, where he is now permanently located, and that he was expecting to be joined by his family. He is in love with the country. Mr. Potts' friends here will be pleased to learn that he is again satisfactorily settled in business.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Sells a Section of Pine.

Last Friday C. N. Bourdon closed a deal with Winton, Daley & Co., of Warsau, Wis., for his pine land for $5,500. The tract embraced a section in all, which has been estimated at a little over 3,000,000 feet of pine. Part of the land is tributary to the waters of the Mississippi river and the balance to the Red Lake river.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

LOCAL TALENT

To Present a Drama In This City.

The Royal Neighbors at their last meeting decided to present to the public of Thief River Falls a drama to be given by local talent. A committee was appointed to select a suitable play and perfect other necessary arrangements. Should the play prove a success it will probably be presented at Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire.

In Trouble.

It now transpires that the Hornerites whom D. W. Hines, the North Dakotan of farmers' railroad fame, routed out of Cavalier county some three years ago, are beginning to find themselves in what to say the least is an awkward predicament in their camp across in Manitoba. Some time since their leader, Elder Radford, married a number of couples belonging to this religious sect. Now it is shown by the courts that he is without legal authority to perform the ceremony, farther that such unions are not recognized by either church or state. This decision is along the line that Hines argued against the Hornerites in his memborable crusade referred to above.

He Keeps Still.

St. Hilaire has a man that can saw more wood with a buck saw than any other man in the state. His name is S. Harris. He sawed six cords, once in two, in ten hours.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Wants to Go to Cuba.

A Washington special to the Pioneer Press states that Representative Frank M. Eddy has recommended ex-Lieut. Sam Bardelson, of this city, for a position in the Cuba postal service.

It Made Him Sick.

W. E. Culver accidentially took some poison last week. He was taken violently sick, but fortunately nothing serious happened.

OFFICERS

Elected by the Local Commercial Club.

At the meeting of the Commercial Club held last Friday evening in the Odd Fellows hall, the following gentlemen were elected officers:

President—K. M. Hansen.
Vice-President—Matt Barzen.
Secretary—F. J. Stebbins.
Treasurer—John Moylan.

The officers are all substanoial business men and it is expected that under their guidance the club will prosper. A committee consisting of C. L. Dobner, John Moylan and Sam Bardelson was appointed by the chair to solicit funds and investigate a plan of action for securing a county seat for Thief River Falls.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs. John Connery, wife of a well known farmer, who lives near Fertile, had a narrow escape from being severely burned one day last week. She was on her way to Fertile and before starting had placed a hot stone in the bottom of her cutter for a foot warmer. All went well until she was near town, when she discovered her dress and skirts to be on fire. She threw of the lap robes and immediately was enveloped in flames and cloud of smoke, but her presence of mind saved her, as she leaped from the cutter into the loose snow, and succeeded in extinguishing the fire with but slight burns, but her dress was badly damaged.

Farthest North for Wheat.

Wheat was last year grown farther north than ever before. At Fort Providence, on the Mackenzie river, just above the sixty-second parallel of latitude, there is a Roman Catholic mission and at this institution a very fine wheat crop has grown. The crop was grown and harvested in 90 days. The latitude of Fort Providence is 200 miles farther north then Sitka, Alaska, and is about the same as that of "Greenland's icy mountains."—Land Agents' Record.

For the Red Lake River.

Minnesota has shared handsomely in the distribution of appropriations for the river and harbor improvements. The sum of $5,000 has been appropriated for the use of the Red Lake river between this city and the Red Lake. A survey of the Red Lake and the Red Lake river, with a view of constructing a dam at the outlet, will be made.

THE NEWS,
By John W. Eastman.
PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Representative Mausten, of Aitkin, has prepared and introduced a bill providing a bounty of $5 for every wolf killed, the county to pay one-third of the cost. The pelt is to be exhibited as an evidence of the killing.

A resolution has been passed by the Minnesota legislature requesting the Minnesota delegation at Washington to support a proposition to amend the constitution so as to provide for the election of a United States senator by a direct vote of the people.

Gov. Lind has incured the wrath of Minneapolis by appointing E. S. Corser as surveyor general of logs and lumber. Mr. Corser was formally one of those financiers, who failed with liabilities amounting to $794,000, and assetts of about $80,000.

Senator Knute Nelson last week addressed the senate on the pease treaty and made one of the strongest speeches of the session on this important question. He maintained that this government had the right to acquire and govern foreign territory, and his argument was backed up by high legal authority and sound logic. He was heartily congratulated by the senators upon his effort.

The citizens of Walker are quite excited over the proposed idea of moving the headquarters of the Leech Lake Indian agency from a sightly point just across the bay from Walker to a point on Lake Winnebegoshish called Bena. They claim President Hill, of the Great Northern, is back of the scheme, and they are doing what they can to thwart his movements. The removal of the agency would be a bad blow to Walker.

Some Postal Facts.

The United States spend more money by $16,000,000 a year than any other nation for our postal service, the total last year being $90,626,296; Germany is second, with $74,237,430, and Great Britain third, with $40,139,835. We stand second in the amount of mail matter handled per capita. New South Wales is just a little ahead, with 92.9 packages a year an inhabitant, while we handle 92.4 packages. Great Britain is third, with 77.8. Germany handles more foreign letters, received and sent, than any other nation. Austria handles the largest number of foreign postal cards and the United States the largest number of newspapers, sent and received, in the foreign mails. We are fourth in the number of letters handled.

The United States has nearly twice as many postoffices as any other country, the total being 71,465, and the largest number of employes, 198,605. Germany is second, with 39,350 offices and 183,212 employes, and Great Britain is third, with 20,750 offices and 144,700 employes. In proportion to area we are away behind on the list, having only one postoffice to every fifty-six square miles of territory, but we count all the mountains and the plains. Switzerland is first, having one postoffice to every 4.7 square miles; Great Britain second, and then come Germany, Belgium, Portugal, Holland, Luxemburg, Italy, Roumania, Denmark, Austria, France, Hungary and Japan, all ahead of the United States. New Zealand has a postoffice for every 510 inhabitants, Canada one for every 531, New South Wales for every 647, Switzerland for every 859 and the United States for every 897 inhabitants.

In the length of mail routes we are away ahead, because of our enormous territory. We send our mails over 172,696 miles of railway and 286,451 miles of what we call star routes, embracing steamship lines, stages and other methods of carying mail. Germany comes next, with 28,634 railway miles and 67,066 miles of other service. Our postal cars last year ran 264,654,008 miles, those of Germany 124,550,525 miles and those of France 75,212,165.

CAPITOL NOTES

Gossip and Opinions Gathered in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Jan. 24.

The new members of the legislature have thus far as usual taken the lead in introducing bills. when the members have served a session or two they begin to realize that there is much hard work and little glory connected with new measures. Morever not more than one bill out of every four is likely to become a law. The work of the older and more experienced members is directed toward the perfecting of good bills and the killing of bad ones. The danger of too much legislation is more imminent than that of too little. If all the bills introduced were to become laws, the state would be ruined in a very few years.

* * *

The Populists in some parts of the state are very much exercised by the friendly attitude of Gov. Lind toward Warden Wolfer of the state prison. In the northwestern part of the state the prison management figured very conspiciously in the campaign and this was one of the institutions which the followers of John Lind promised to renovate. To find that the idol of their devotion, in whose interest they charged all kinds of corruption against the prison management, deliberately endorses Mr. Wolfer's work is a humiliation which the Populists will not soon forget. The real thorn in their flesh is perhaps that there is one job less for the forty-year appetites.

* * *

Strange things happen in this "land of the free and home of the brave." When the clerk of the house of representatives in his roll-call calls the names, "Wheaton! Winston!" which names come together, but few realize the wonderful story which the simple calling of those names tell. Hon. Frank J. Wheaton is the negro elected as a member of the legislature from Minneapolis. Hon. P. B. Winston, also a member from Minneapolis, comes from an aristocratic family of the South. Here the two meet as equals, representing the people of a great state in its legislative halls. Not only this, but they serve on the same delegation and when a vote is taken answer one after the other.

* * *

Appointments in the legislature as a rule represent the combined "pull" of influential men. When one aspires to an appointive office he must have the delegation of his own district back of him and the support of as many others as possible. Among the appointments made by Speaker Dare there is, however, one notable exception which is deserving of comment. Harry Fine is a little street arab who has contributed to his own support and that of his parents by selling flowers on the streets and in the hotel lobbies in St. Paul. Being a bright boy many have naturally taken a liking to him and an interest in his affairs. Harry is said to be ambitious to start his father in business and has saved eighty dollars for this purpose. The boy was brought to the attention of Speaker Dare, who appointed him as one of the pages of the house. One of the clerks saves Harry's money for him and when the session is over he will have quite a sum.

* * *

During the past two weeks several old soldiers employed in state departments have been given their walking papers because they were not Democrats or Populists. By the way, wasn't there something said during the campaign about the discharge of a single old soldier and one who had been derelict in his duties while policeman in Minneapolis? The veterans who have had to go this time have been thoroughly competent men and their discharge is due to the fact that they did not support Lind. Democrats preach nice sermons during the campaign but after the election they seem to lack faith in their doctrines.

A LAW SUIT

That's What May Be the Result.

Louis McMahon, of the East Side, last week caused a warrant to be issued for the arrest of Chief Benzie and Ernest P. Witner. The complaint is for abusing his wife.

The story is rather a long one and is full of pathos. Mr. and Mrs. McMahon are very humble people, honest and poor. Witner is their son-in-law and is not spoken of in highest terms by those who know him. Mrs. Witner died a year and a half ago and left a 3-days-old baby girl, which has since been cared for by Mr. and Mrs. McMahon. Witner has never contributed a cent toward the support of the baby, but some time ago he called at the house with Chief Benzie and demanded the girl. Mrs. McMahon very naturally refused, and it is claimed that they tried to take the baby by force, but afterwards left, leaving the child with Mrs. McMahon. A few days afterwards Witner, through his attorney, F. Hibner, brought a writ of habeas corpus before Court Commissioner John Mathews, of Red Lake Falls, and secured possession of the child. Mr. McMahon states that they were notified of the matter late Friday and as the case came up Saturday they did not have the time nor money with which to hire an attorney, and consequently did not go to Red Lake Falls and make an appearance. As stated above the court decided in favor of Witner, and the child was turned over to Constable Geo. Williams without any objection upon the part of the parents.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McMahon are sorely grieved over losing the child which they have loved and cared for a year and a half. It was the dying wish, they say, of the mother that they should have the care of the girl. They denounce Witner in the strongest terms, and say that he is worthless and greatly addicted to strong drink. Mr. McMahon states that he feels he is justified in causing Witner's and Chief Benzie's arrest. County Attorney Brown has been sent for to prosecute the case. It is not believed that Mr. Benzie can be convicted of any act derogatory to a policeman.

A New Resident.

Senator J. Q. Cronchite, of Argyle, was in the city the first of the week. Mr. Cronchite is going into the stock raising business near Rollis postoffice, about seven miles north of this city. He expects to remove his family to this city in the spring, and make his permanent residence here.

Driving More Piling.

What time that love was young and glee
In every pulsing heart throb stirred.

The wild plum blossomed in the glen,
The [illegible] across the plain,
And frightened birdlings flurried when
Our [illegible] horses tramped the grain.

Down in the grove beside the spring
We rested when the race was won,
And listened to the wood birds sing
A lullaby when day was done.

But, oh, you wandered from my side
And paved the long lone lane of years
With memory stones and lost too wide
For sobs to soothe with memory tears.

And now you come—come back to me
To fill, as then, the old time place—
Where is the magic of your plea?
What change has come upon your face?

Oh, friend, to lose and still love on,
To live on chaff instead of grain
Is better than to feel love gone—
Forgetting is the keenest pain.

CHARLES STEWART PARNELL

How the Great Irish Leader Came to Enter Politics.

Charles Stewart Parnell was 28 years old before he made his entry into the political arena. How the step was taken is thus described by Mr. R. Barry O'Brien in his biography of the great Irish leader:

"One night during the general election of 1874 Parnell dined with his sister, Mrs. Dickinson, in Dublin. After dinner Captain Dickinson said: 'Well, Charles, why don't you go into parliament? Why don't you stand for your native county?'

"To the surprise of every one at the table, Parnell said quickly: 'I will. Whom ought I to see?'

"'Oh,' said Dickinson, 'we will see about that tomorrow. The great thing is you have decided to stand.'

"'I will see about it at once,' said Parnell. 'I have made up my mind, and I won't wait. Whom ought I to see?'

"'I think Gray of The Freeman's Journal,' said John, who was also present.

"'Very well,' said Parnell, rising from the table. 'I shall go to him at once. Do you come with me, John.'

"The two brothers then went away together. It was now 11 o'clock, and they found Gray at The Freeman's office. He was amazed when Parnell entered and said, 'I have come to say, Mr. Gray, that I mean to stand for Wicklow as a Home Ruler.'"

It was only the year after that, on the death of John Mitchel, Parnell was returned for Meath. At first it is plain that Parnell had few if any followers. The ability of the representative from Meath was questioned. Butt was then the controlling power. It was only in 1880 that Parnell became the leader.

FREAKS OF MEMORY.

QUEER PRANKS FOR WHICH THERE IS NO ACCOUNTING.

Some Instances of the Singular Effects Produced Upon the Mind by Gazing Steadily at a Crystal—Forgotten Incidents Recalled.

The queer freaks of memory are a constant puzzle to those who study psychical phenomena. Who has not been driven to the verge of distraction by the total inability to recall a name when an effort was made to do so and when the occasion for such remembrance was past had the missing name flash into the mind apparently of its own volition?

Great minds have wrestled to find an explanation for the pranks that memory plays and have had to give up the effort. In the course of a systematic attempt to arrive at some understanding with regard to the wonders of memory a very valuable and unique body of testimony has been obtained. The following questions have been put to 200 American university students and professional persons, 151 being men and 49 being women. The answers are here given with the questions:

Question 1.—When you cannot recall a name you want, does it seem to come back spontaneously without being suggested by any perceived association of ideas? To this 11 per cent answered "No" and 81 per cent "Yes."

Question 2.—Does such recovery ever come during sleep? To this 17 per cent answered "No" and 28 per cent "Yes."

Some examples given:

1. This morning I tried to recall the name of a character I had read of the night before in one of Scott's novels and failed. I taught a class, and walking home in the afternoon all the names recurred to me without effort.

2. I tried to recall the name of a book. Gave it up. Half an hour later, while talking of something else, blurted it out without conscious volition.

Question 3.—On seeing a sight or hearing a sound for the first time, have you ever felt that you had seen (or heard) the same before? Fifty-nine per cent answered "Yes."

The action of unconscious memory during sleep is illustrated by further queries:

Question 4.—Do you dream? Ninety-four per cent answered "Yes."

Question 5.—Can you wake at a given hour determined before going to sleep without waking up many times before? Fifty-nine per cent answered "Yes." Thirty-one per cent answered "No."

Question 6.—If you can, how about failure? Sixty-nine per cent seldom failed; 25 per cent often.

Question 7.—Do you come direct from oblivion into consciousness? Sixty-four per cent answered "Yes" and 16 per cent "Gradually."

Examples:

1. I had to give medicine every two hours exactly to my wife. I am a very sound sleeper, but for six weeks I woke up every two hours and never missed giving the medicine.

2. I am always awake five minutes before the hour I set the alarm.

3. I had had little sleep for ten days and went to bed at 9, asking to be called at midnight. I fell asleep at once. I rose and dressed as the clock struck 12, and could not believe I had not been called.

A strange phenomenon has come to light in the course of the inquiry into the mystery of memory. It has been discovered that by gazing steadily at a crystal consciousness is partly lost. Into the void thus produced those who have practiced crystal gazing find that there enter unbidden forgotten incidents and lost memories. To give a few instances: A lady in crystal gazing saw a bit of dark wall covered with white flowers. She was conscious she must have seen it somewhere, but had no recollection where. She walked over the ground she had just traversed and found the wall, which she had passed unnoticed.

She took out her bankbook another day. Shortly afterward she was gazing at the crystal and saw nothing but the number one. She thought it was some hack number, but, taking up the bankbook, found to her surprise it was the number of the account.

At another time she destroyed a letter without noting the address. She could only remember the town. After gazing at the crystal some time she saw "321 Jefferson avenue." She addressed the letter there, adding the town, and found it was right.

A lady sat in a room to write where she had sat eight years before. She felt her feet moving restlessly under the table and then remembered that eight years before she always had a footstool. It was this her feet were seeking.

Psychical research brings to light many cases of similar strange tricks of memory. It is easy to find instances that serve to deepen the mystery. It is not so easy to give an explanation. The cleverest men who have attempted to do so have had to admit defeat.—Washington Post.

The Women of Belgium.

No one can travel in Belgium without being struck by the extraordinary activity and prominence of the women. Over the doors of shops of all descriptions the name of the owner or owners is frequently followed by "Sœurs" or "Veuve." You find them proprietors of hotels and restaurants. They are often custodians of the churches. They are employed to tow the boats along the canal banks. They cut up the meat in the butchers' shops, and they are even to be noticed shoeing horses at the forge.

To Be Avoided.

Mrs. De Sour—I want you to keep your dog out of my house. It's full of fleas.

Mrs. De Smart—Mercy on me! Fido, come here, sir! Don't you go into that house again. It's full of fleas.—Jewish Comment.

CLOTHES SPECIALS.

Queer Pockets and Things Tailors Have to Put In Garments.

"No special."

With that remark to the assistant who took down the measurements the tailor dismissed his patron and said that the suit would be finished "sure" on a certain day.

"What did you mean by saying 'no special' to your clerk?" asked the customer.

"Well, that means that you want your clothes made all right and without any crank things about them. Pockets are the great specials. We have customers who want, besides the regular pockets, places in their waistcoats for pencils, eyeglasses and all sorts of things. Some pencil pockets are made to hold only one pencil and some for a bunch. Eyeglass pockets are also ordered in keeping with the shape and style of the glasses, and pockets for cigars are ordered for all sizes, from the little half pencil shape to the great big perfecto. Freak pockets, inside of other pockets, are also in demand, and chamois lined pockets, which we usually make for the watch side of the waistcoat, are ordered often for trousers by men who carry silver trinkets in them."

Another class of special customers are those whose garments are made with a view to the wearer's health. Many men have an inner band of red flannel put on the waist of their trousers as a cure for rheumatism, and some driving coats are made so that sheets of stout paper may be slipped between the breast lining and the cloth when driving against the wind.

"On the whole," said the tailor, "a man in my business has the best opportunity to find out the kinks and queer points about men, not only as to their persons, but their minds."—New York Tribune.

FINERTY'S SERMON.

It Brought Praise From the Preacher Who Didn't Deliver It.

Before ex-Congressman John Finerty became famous as the great American British lion tail twister he was one of the best reporters in Chicago. He was on The Tribune, and one day a certain city editor (best known to fame as the man who always wore a straw hat and smoked a corncob pipe) decided that Mr. Finerty should be disciplined.

It was Saturday, and some time after midnight. Mr. Finerty was assigned to report the morning sermon of an obscure minister way down on the South Side. Finerty was the senior, and his associates were thunderstruck. They expected an explosion, at least, but Finerty remained calm and dignified, although a trifle pale. "Then he will resign," they thought, but Finerty walked out and made no sign. To the surprise of every one, he reported the next day as usual and turned in an abstract of the sermon. Every one read it on Monday morning, and it was certainly an eloquent and carefully reported sermon.

That afternoon a man of clerical cut called on the city editor and asked to see the young man who had reported his sermon the morning before. Mr. Finerty was introduced. The man of the clerical cut would like to see Mr. Finerty alone for a few moments. Out in the hallway he asked, "Of course, you were not at my church yesterday morning?"

"No," replied Finerty.

"Well, I simply stopped to thank you for the sermon. It was far more eloquent than the one I preached."

Finerty had composed the sermon in a neighboring cellar beer saloon on Saturday night.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Fog In Photography.

One serious and at the same time unsuspected source of fog in photography is often due to the fact that the blacking has slightly worn off the lens mount and there is a reflection which results in a loss of brilliancy in the negative. Constant use and endless cleaning of the lens in time wear the blacking off, and this should be attended to and all metal parts kept well blacked. Where lenses are mounted in aluminium still more care is necessary in this respect, as, wherever in such cases the blacking wears off, white light instead of yellow light is reflected into the lens.

Sometimes diaphragms of the iris pattern are greatly at fault in this respect. By reason of its construction the leaves or vanes in this diaphragm are in constant friction while being set, and thus become polished and reflective, for which reason some photographers avoid having iris diaphragms in their lenses, notwithstanding their convenience. A careful examination of the apparatus will insure safety in this matter. Stops of the ordinary pattern become in time little better than bare metal, especially at the edges of the aperture.

Some Clerical Jokes.

"Do you have matins in your church?" "No, we prefer linoleum." Another clerk gave out in church, "Let us sing to the praise and glory of God a hymn of my own composure." A lady asked the dean to read at her bedside "that beautiful lesson * * * there was summat about greaves in it." The dean read her I Samuel, xvii. "She listened with arms outstretched and made no comment until I came to the verse, 'He had greaves of brass upon his legs.' At this she raised her hands in ecstasy and said, 'Ah, them greaves, them beautiful greaves!' "—"Phases of My Life," by Dean Pigou.

A proposal has been made by a French chemist to obtain easily assimilable iron tonics from vegetables by feeding the plants judiciously with iron fertilizers.

THE BREAKER.

In appearance he was about as commonplace as other people—a middle aged man, inclined to portliness. As the train moved on he discussed commonplace subjects with me in a commonplace way. I should not have been surprised to have been told that he was a stockbroker or a solicitor, or that he was engaged in the tea trade. In the course of our chat something happened to be said about curious occupations.

"Well," said my companion, "I do not suppose that there is any more curious occupation than my own. I am a breaker."

He had not at all the appearance of a man used to horses, but I suggested, "A horse breaker, you mean?"

"No," he said, "just a plain breaker; a man who breaks things—breaks anything that requires to be broken; gets his living by breaking."

I glanced nervously at the communicator, though he looked even less like a lunatic than he did like a horse breaker.

"I see," he said, smiling, "that I must explain. When I left Cambridge with a classical degree, no prospects and no influence I looked about for a profession. I found everything overcrowded. Besides none of the professions appealed to me at all. I like to travel about a little, and I enjoy social life. I like talking—talking to any one. I hate work of any kind. This being the case, I looked about me to see if there was not a chance for some new profession—if among our million wants there was not one that was not supplied.

"The idea came to me by accident. I was stopping at my uncle's house when he received as a present from his wife's brother a singularly ugly but very valuable pair of oriental vases. His wife's brother was frequently in my uncle's house, and therefore these abominations had to be displayed. I heard him grumbling about this. I suggested that he should sell them. The idea was of course absurd. He told me so. Nor, he said, could he break them himself, for his wife's brother would never forgive him; nor could he ask his wife to break them, because, although he has been married 15 years, he felt that he did not know her well enough; nor could he ask the servants to break them, for that would encourage carelessness and thriftlessness. 'That is all right,' I said. I rose from my place and smashed the vases one after the other on the floor. 'Sorry I was so clumsy,' I said. 'You had better ring and have this rubbish cleared away.' He rang and told the servant that I had broken them accidentally. When she had gone, he said without a smile, 'It seems rather a pity.' I said, 'I am short of ready money. Could you lend me £5?' He wrote me a check for £10 and said that I was a useful man to know of. Then I said, 'Recommend me to your friends,' for already I saw the possibility of my future profession. He mentioned me to some half dozen people he knew, some of whom I had never seen in my life before. They sent me invitations to their houses, and they indicated the objects on which I was to operate. In my first week I broke, I remember, a lamp shaped like an owl, an oil painting, a tea service and a dining room table."

"But an oil painting," I said—"how does one break an oil painting?"

"It is simple enough," he said. "I first of all undid the wires so that the picture fell, then in picking it up I put my foot through the face. It was a portrait of my host's wife's aunt. It was more difficult to break the dining room table. I recollect that it became necessary for the purpose to invent a somewhat boisterous form of round game. Even then we had to play it for three evenings before the legs came off. When I left this house, my host handed me a check and promised to recommend me to other people. I never advertise, and I have more breaking to do than I can possibly find time for. If I could find a young man with plenty of tact, I would take him as an assistant."

"It must need some tact," I suggested.

"It does. It so often happens that I am employed by the husband without the knowledge of the wife, or by the wife without the knowledge of the husband. Even with the utmost tact one gets oneself disliked, but that I must put up with. The other day one of my clients asked me to come to his house to break a dinner service. I dined there and made myself as pleasant as I could and told several good stories. But then I also broke the dinner service, or most of it, and it was one to which my hostess was much attached. She said to him afterward, 'I will never have that brute in my house again!' "

"And what did he say?"

"He said: 'I fully agree with you, my dear. To the best of my belief the man was drunk. If he had not been the son of an old college friend, I should never have asked him at all.' This was a little mean, but then it was necessary for him to cover himself in some way, and as I never break a dinner service under £25, I received some solatium for the indignity."

"Have you got any engagements at present?" I asked.

"Yes," he said. "I am going to one now, but it is a trifling thing, requiring no tact at all. Had I had an assistant I should have sent him. I am to go the day after a wedding reception when the presents are being packed. Those which from their ugliness or worthlessness are not worth packing up and sending to the bridegroom's distant home have been placed on a separate shelf. I shall upset that shelf and accidentally stamp on anything which is not broken in the fall. The job won't take five minutes, and I get 3 guineas for it. I am doing it for the bridegroom without the knowledge of the bride. Men begin to deceive women very soon, I find."

"I have," I said, "one or two little objects in my own home which—"

But at this moment the train entered Victoria station, and, though I managed to complete my sentence, and my companion said that he would be glad at any time to oblige me, in the confusion of our arrival I neglected to take his name and address or to give him mine."—Barry Pain.

An Actor's Dose.

It is told of a well known actor, now dead, that he would never take any physic, and his medical adviser was often obliged to resort to some stratagem to impose a dose on him.

There is a play in which the hero is sentenced in prison to drink a cup of poison. The actor was playing the part one night and had given directions for the cup to be filled with port, but what was his horror when he came to drink it to find it contained a dose of senna. To throw it away was out of the question, as he had to turn the goblet upside down to show his persecutors he had drained every drop of it.

He drank the medicine with the slowness of a poisoned martyr, but he never forgave his medical man, as was proved at his death, for he did without paying his doctor's bill.—London Answers.

That Ditch.

Day F. Stacy, the surveyor, returned from Marshall county, where he has just completed the survey and and estimates for a state ditch about 10¾ miles long that will prove a great benefit to the towns of New Solum, Norden, Viking and Marsh Grove, as in times of high water or unusual rainfall the whole country goes under, and owing to lack of water courses, stays there until the storm water can find its slow way through marshes and sloughs to Middle river. The building of this ditch will expedite the seeding in spring, besides getting away with the water from summer storms in 25 per cent. of the time now required. The state has enough unselected swamp lands in the country affected by this ditch to more than pay for its construction if sold for $2.50 per acre.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Cass Lake Reservation Opening.

Advices received in St. Paul from the department of the interior say that the Cass Lake reservation will be thrown open for settlement some time during the early summer, probably about June 15. The new Fosston branch of the Great Northern makes this very desirable land. At present there are about 500 squatters on the land waiting for a chance to make an entry, and as many more are expected in the spring.

This will probably be the last Indian reservation thrown open for several years. There are some desirable lands in the Red Lake country which was thrown open last fall.

A Social Club.

At a meeting held last Saturday evening a Social Club was organized with M. McAndress, president; Jas. M. Hall, secretary and M. Rosenberg, treasurer. Resolutions were adopted, committees appointed and everything in first-class working order. Dances will be given every second and fourth Saturday in each month.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Not Getting Rich.

A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, who is surveyor general of logs and lumber in the Seventh, created a ripple of laughter in the senate last week by reporting that his fees for 1898 were $42.60 less than the expenses of his office. Following is the report:

Receipts, for recording log marks and transfers, $37.50; for recording liens and other instruments, $11.25; for fees received for scaling logs for the season of 1897 and 1898, $299.41; making a total of $348.16. His total expenses during the same season were $390.76, leaving a deficit of $42.60. Mr. Stephens also states that "for obvious reasons" he has not paid employes in his office. Of his expenses, Scaler D. B. Tousley received $162.50; and Tousley's expense bill was $25. E. J. Butler received $108.26, and assistant scalers received $75, while Mr. Stephens paid $20 for office supplies.

New Livery Stable.

Bourdon & Sieff on Saturday purchased from Frank E. Hunt lots 23 and 24, block 10, Champagne & Dow's addition, consideration $400 spot cash. These lots are finely located on the corner of Main and Fourth streets and the firm will build a livery stable 100x40, with a wing for the office 14x16. The buggy room will be 34x40. J. J. Rue has the contract and agrees to have the structure ready for occupancy by Feb. 1st. This will require considerable hustling, but no doubt the feat will be accomplished. Bourdon & Sieff will then own two livery stables.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

New Dates.

A bill has been introduced and passed in the legislature fixing the term of court in this judicial district as follows:

Norman county, second Monday in November and fourth Monday in March; Polk county, first Tuesday after first Monday in January and first Tuesday in June; Red Lake, second Monday in February and fourth Monday in October; Marshall, second Monday in March and first Monday in December; Kittson, first Monday in March and third Monday in November; Roseau, third Tuesday in May.

Red Lake County Farm Lands.

For the month of December 1898, there was 2,717 acres of land transferred in Red Lake county The aggregate sum paid for the land was $16,365, or on the average $6 per acre. That is not a bad showing for one month.

Is It Really So?

It is being noised around that we are to have a fire bell. At the dance given by the ladies last fall in honor of our soldier boys, they cleared something like thirty-five dollars, which was donated to the city for the purpose of purchasing a bell. The council will add the balance and the bell will be bought and put in place in the tower of the city hall in the near future.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

A dispatch from Christiana states that United States Senator Knute Nelson, the American commissioner to Bergen, has been gazetted a Knight of St. Olaf.

The village of Princeton, Minn., is supported without a cent of tax levy, the licenses and fines more than paying the running expenses. The same thing could be accomplished in Thief River Falls.

The McKinley Club of Crookston have issued invitations to their second annual banquet in honor of Lincoln. It will be held upon the evening of Feb. 13th at the hotel Crookston. J. Adam Bede, J. J. Ryder and E. P. Young will respond to toasts.

Should Cuban soldiers take to the fields and become bandits the United States military authorities will know what to do. They will be followed by a force of cavalry and persistently pursued. The same general method will be observed as has been followed in in dealing with the Indians in the plains and mountains of the West. The plan has been carefully considered by old border fighters, who are confident they could catch the bandits, notwithstanding the climatic conditions.

Will Wheat Cultivation Be Held In Check?

That is to the crop most readily convertible into money that, all other things being equal, the farmer will give the preference in determining what he will grow, needs no proof. The cultivation of wheat at the expense of other necessary crops will, however, be held in check by two very powerful influences. The first will arise from the fact that a reduction of the acreage under any product of general use below the actual requirements of the country will instantly—perhaps even prospectively—affect the price of the product, possibly in a proportion even greater than that by which its acreage is diminished, and may even be sufficient to constitute it a competitor with wheat on equal terms for the farmer's favor. The second check will be found in the fact that the American farmer, north, south, east and west, has at last fully awakened to the safety, stability, and, in the long run, increased profit resulting from a judiciously diversified system of farming. The one-crop system has passed away, never to return, and before wheat can be extensively cultivated at the expense of other products it will not only have to command what would now appear to us an excessively high price and afford a reasonable assurance of its continuing so to do, but would have to do this without affecting to any considerable extent the price of our products.—From "America and the Wheat Problem," by John Hyde, Statistician of the U. S. department of Agriculture, in "North American Review" for February.

A LITTLE GAME.

They had each found their affinity. They felt sure of this, but they found it extremely difficult to make the old man in the case understand the interesting fact. She was the only daughter of the old man who acted the stony hearted parent, and the youth on whom she lavished her whole affection, alas, was only an underpaid clerk in the old man's Wall street office.

Algernon—his name was not a bit like Algernon, but let it go at that—Algernon was a bright, promising young fellow, and he had been a welcome guest at the old millionaire's house until one day he had almost made the old man throw a fit by declaring his love for Belinda. He had other views for his only daughter, and Algernon was sternly forbidden to see or even communicate with the gentle Belinda again on pain of instant dismissal from the office, while the lovesick maiden was shut up in the family residence, closely guarded, and all the mail at both office and residence was personally supervised and examined by the millionaire himself.

In spite of all these precautions the lovers found some mysterious means to communicate with one another. The old man was sure of this, but when he stormed and demanded an explanation of how Algernon knew the most minute detail of Belinda's home life, when he bullied Belinda to tell him how on earth she learned every little happening to Algernon at the office, even to the particulars of his private conversations, the pair would only smile happily and say, "She, or he, is my affinity, my 'alter ego,' and no power on earth can make us live apart."

"Bosh!" replied the stony hearted one, but still he was perplexed, for in spite of keeping a sterner espionage over the pair their revelations of their absolute knowledge of each other's movements and affairs became bolder and more marvelous every day.

Not contented with this, they dared the old man to put their mutual hypnotic control to the test.

"Tonight, sir, when you arrive at home," said Algernon, "Belinda will meet you in the hall and with a kindly smile of welcome she will take your hat and cane and escort you to the library. When the dinner is over, she will take a red rose from a vase on the table and pin it in your buttonhole, after which she will go to the piano and sing one verse of 'Oh, Promise Me.' Should you ask her for a second verse, she will sadly reply, 'I cannot sing that song, for I am not permitted to keep my promises.' Those will be her exact words. Then she will retire to her room.

"You will be so mad that in the morning you will threaten her with banishment to Europe, but she will tell you that space cannot separate affinities and offer to prove the glorious fact to you."

"Bosh!" again ejaculated the millionaire, but when everything happened precisely as his underpaid clerk had predicted he felt uneasy and passed a most unpleasant night.

In the morning he did not threaten his dainty daughter with banishment to Europe, and he chuckled as he thought that Algernon was wrong for once, but as the obedient Belinda handed him his hat and cane he jokingly asked her how it was she never more asked for news of Algernon.

"It is not necessary, papa," said the maiden with downcast eyes. "We are affinities, you know, and ever present, each with the other."

"Bosh!" again exclaimed the irate old man. He was fast coming to a point when he knew of nothing else to say, so strange were the circumstances surrounding him. "I suppose you know what he would do if I should fire him from the office and ruin all his prospects in life?" continued the furious old man.

"I know you would not be so cruel," said the little maiden. "Indeed I know that today you will consent to my seeing him again, for I will prove to you that we are together in soul already. Listen! See if I am right!

"Soon after you have entered your private office today," continued Belinda, in tragic tones and with a faraway look, like one peering into the future, "he will knock three times at your door and offer you a present. You will angrily refuse. He will softly whistle a bar or two of 'If Yo' Ain't Got No Money, Yo' Needn't Come 'Round,' and resume his seat. Exactly one hour afterward he will knock twice and extend another peace offering. Again you will reply angrily. One hour later he will knock only once and enter without speaking. When you ask him what he wants, he will reply, 'The hand of your daughter.' If you again refuse, you will return to find your Belinda is no more."

Again the old fellow felt inclined to say "Bosh!" but the word stuck in his throat, and he hurried from the house with an uncanny feeling creeping all down his back.

When he reached the office, he plunged briskly into business, but his heart leaped wildly when he heard three steady knocks on the door and the handsome, insolent face of Algernon peeped in, asking the absurd question, "Would you like a few peanuts, governor?"

With an oath the millionaire drove him out, but his blood almost froze as he heard the clerk, in no way perturbed, softly whistling the first bars of May Irwin's latest popular song.

Just an hour later "Bang! bang!" came the knocks again. This time the peace offering took the shape of a square of cocoanut candy. Such audacity had never been heard of, and the Wall street man was furious. But when, after 60 minutes, the apparently crazy clerk knocked at the door of the private office only once and entered silently Belinda's stern parent was almost speechless with mingled rage and fear.

"What do you want?" he instinctively roared.

"The hand of your daughter," was the solemn reply.

Then the doting father could no longer doubt the power of affinities. He feared to refuse lest the full and fearful penalty should fall on him. Lest he should return and find that by his relentless conduct he had killed his darling daughter, he capitulated and gave his full consent.

He felt a happier man as he started for home that night. Even when his hat blew off at a windy corner and he crushed it out of shape in stopping it with his foot he did not swear. It was not until, on picking it up, a piece of his own office paper fell from under the lining and he read it that he opened his vocabulary of cuss words. What he read was this:

Sweetest Belinda—Victory! Your father consents. Our little game of hypnotic influence and sham affinities has met with full success. No more need to make your stony hearted parent our private postman. Wasn't it lucky we hit upon the happy idea of following the old man's own example by talking through his hat? Your ever loving Algernon.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

"Come, Will, give my ring to me!"

"I haven't seen it, dear."

"Why, I put it on that shelf when I began my work. Come, don't tease me."

"My darling, I'm not teasing you. I haven't seen your ring. Give me a kiss, little woman, and don't show temper."

"Who is showing temper?" asked Celia as she broke from his embrace. "Oh, you are so aggravating! The squire's son asked me the other day what I could see in a big laughing booby like you to care for, and I wonder now myself, I"—

"Stop there, Cecilia. Jim Bartlett's mad because you refused him, but you should not listen to his talk about me. Booby! Well, I guess the folks hereabouts know which is the 'booby' of this village," retorted Will vehemently.

"I'll listen to whom I please and when I please, and if you don't like it you may go to Vira Whittier for comfort. I heard you were walking home with her the other night. Well, go to her and give her your old ring, and—and"— But words failed the now thoroughly angry girl, and tearing by her devoted swain she raced up stairs to her room.

Will felt badly abused, and the mention of his pet loathing, Jim Bartlett, had not helped matters in the least. He strode to the foot of the stairs and called:

"Celia, I'm going to punch Jim Bartlett's head, and then I'm going home. I shan't come back till you send for me."

"I don't care. Go home, and good riddance!" were the words the foolish girl made in response.

But Will did return—that evening—and hoped to find his sweetheart in her usual light hearted frame of mind. Celia, though, was convinced that Will had taken her ring to tease her, and even if she loved the ring and the giver dearly no man should be allowed to call her careless, and not even Will should be permitted to play pranks on her.

Cross words flew fast between them that night, and Celia seemed intent on maddening Will, who, in turn, appeared, from her standpoint, to be bound to misunderstand and dictate to her. Finally he tore from the house, saying:

"I mean it now. I'll never come here again until you send for me."

"You need never come unless you bring my ring and say you are sorry," was her reply.

Such little things make such vast differences; such trifling causes bring such disastrous results.

Like wildfire it spread through the village that Celia and Will had quarreled, and no one seemed to be able to pro peacemaker. At the end of the week Will went away, and shortly after that Celia returned some of her gifts, and those that the givers would not take back she packed in an old chest in the shed chamber.

At the wedding cake she stared dismally and was about to "throw it to the pigs" when a tender thought of all it stood emblematic for thrilled her and she dropped a big salt tear on its frosted surface, then sealed it carefully and stored it safely away.

Bless you, reader, all that happened nearly 25 years back.

Rumors reached home occasionally, and it was generally understood that Will Treadway had grown rich, made money in mines or something of a like nature, but nothing definite was known, and no one spoke of him to Miss Thaxter.

"Aunt Celia," as every one now called her, was a sweet voiced, silvery haired woman, and her patience, gentleness and kindliness were the talk of the village. She was always to be found at the bedside of the sick, always first at hand when a call came from the poor, and her gentle ways and softly reproving words had often been the means of settling angry disputes and making easier the road of young people who, from impulsiveness, were about to map out dreary futures for themselves.

Her romance was known by all; it had become local history, but everybody loved Aunt Celia, and bitter comment or ridicule was not indulged in when she was the subject of conversation.

One day the engagement of Will's niece was given out. She had been born after her uncle's disappearance, and to her he was only a name.

"Milly," said Aunt Celia to her a short time before the wedding day, "I'm going to give the cake for your bridal feast. It is over 20 years old, but as fresh and sweet as it is rich in memories. The day it was made, dear, I was the happiest and the saddest girl in the world. Don't ask questions, Milly, but please accept it, and be gentle to Bob, my darling. Bear with his faults, as I feel sure he will with yours, and explain all troubles to each other. In that way alone may true happiness be attained."

The wedding was a jolly village happening. It had been whispered about that Aunt Celia's wedding cake—oh, ages and ages old—was "to be cut," and every one was bristling with curiosity to see and taste the confection that reopened all the discussions of the long past romance.

An hour before the ceremony the train from New York came in, and a few expected city guests arrived. Then a big, thoughtful looking man alighted and was greeted by a surprised and loud "Hello! Heavens above! It's brother Will!" from the bride's father.

Never in the history of H. had such a merry wedding been celebrated. There was but one regret—Aunt Celia was not one of the party, and "'tis just as well, seeing how Will Treadway happened to come back," declared one old wiseacre. Aunt Celia had sent a present, but she never attended weddings.

At the little outdoor feast that followed the wonderful cake was cut, and from the slice that was apportioned to Uncle Will dropped a little gold circlet, set with a gleaming diamond that struggled in the sunlight to throw a shaft of sparkling cheer on the amazed faces about the festive board. At dusk that day Miss Thaxter heard a quiet rap on her door.

"Who is it?" called the gentle voice.

"It's only Will, Celia. May I come in? I've brought your ring."—Frank A. Ferguson in Chicago News.

A Curiosity in Motives.

The motives for which women marry are as numerous as the sands of the sea, or—as the women. Our easy assumption is that each one of every engaged couple is "in love" with the "other one"—that is, the parties are drawn together by some mysterious psychic attraction, more or less strong. In truth, this inner personal attraction is not always present, either in both parties to an engagement or even with one of the pair. Accident, propinquity, trifling circumstances, social or family pressure, some slight airy nothing decides the question between marriage or no marriage for the woman so slight that it is as if women were always waiting on the brink of this new experience and a very light touch caused them to fall into or wander into or drift into it, according to their several temperaments.—Exchange.

A LAST CARTRIDGE.

"I say, Aunt Carrie," said Corporal Harry Ainsworth of the Third United States infantry, who was home on a furlough after the campaign in Cuba, "where did this blackened old cartridge come from? I found it in your cabinet. Can I have it? It is just the caliber of my army rifle."

"Ah, Harry, dear," replied the lady addressed, "you little know what sad memories that bit of lead and metal brings back to me or how closely allied it is to your being.

"See this locket?" she continued, taking from about her neck a quaintly designed ornament of gold. "There were two made at the time it was wrought. This one contained my picture, the other that of your mother, my twin sister Anita. Where it is now God only knows. We were as alike in features and form as two rosebuds. Neither of us ever lacked for beaus, though I do say it, and those were happy times when your Uncle Ben and your father, Jim Ainsworth, came courting us.

"Our wedding was a double one, the whole country joining in the festivities, and shortly afterward Jim Ainsworth took his bride and journeyed into what was then the unpeopled wilds of Minnesota. In a small clearing a log hut was soon reared, and there in the course of months a baby was born to them.

"One afternoon as thus she sat crooning to the tot in her arms the alert watchdog outside gave a yelp of alarm and scurried within the cottage, and the next instant the form of a young Indian appeared in the doorway.

"The redskin in all probability had simply been out on a hunting expedition, and seeing the cabin had approached to reconnoiter or perhaps to beg.

"As he steps upon the threshold, however, the beauty of the being he sees possesses him with the thought to make her his own.

"He takes a step forward, when the faithful dog is upon him in an instant, and as the savage draws a knife to strike the beast down the mother, seeing her only protector thus in danger, throws aside the child and springs to the beast's assistance.

"Picture the fierce struggle that ensued, the frail woman receiving the knife thrust meant for the dog. They have come out into the open by this time, and as the woman falls the canine is also quieted by a deathblow.

"The young savage, seeing the devastation he has wrought, is led by the instinct of his race to mutilate the head with its halo of golden hair with his scalping knife, but as he raises the trophy, at the same time snatching the golden locket, such as you now see, from her breast, a shot re-echoes and his face is cut by a bullet from the rifle of the outraged husband. The wounded Indian bounds for his pony and is away for dear life, while Jim, realizing his wife is dead, gallops after, crazed with rage, cursing and firing until the Indian on his fresher horse distances him, when Jim discovers he has wasted his entire supply of ammunition save one cartridge.

"Grief stricken, he turns about and with mad energy urges his pony back, hoping against hope that perhaps his loved one still breathes. But his passionate appeal awakens no response in the inanimate form, and he flings himself to the earth in an agony of despair, only to be recalled to conscious being by a feeble cry from the interior of the hut—his baby has been spared to him.

"Then he came to us a wreck. Privation and a broken heart had done their work, and in a few weeks we buried him.

"Harry, the babe I spoke of was yourself, and this cartridge is the one which still remained unshot."

A fortnight has passed, the Leak Lake Indians have risen in arms against the whites because of an attempt by a United States marshal to arrest one of their chiefs and part of the valiant Third infantry regiment of regulars has been ordered out to quell the insurrection.

The savages, notwithstanding their long term of subjugation to the government, have donned their warpaint and, 500 in number, brazenly defy the handful of soldiers sent to aid the marshal in his undertaking.

Harry, with the other members of his company, is lying behind a temporary earthwork thrown up near Leach lake, in the vicinity of Walker, Minn.

For several hours they have been engaged in a sharp skirmish, and the ping of bullets can be heard striking on every side. A steady fire is being kept up by the soldiers with telling effect, although the red warriors are not the only sufferers, for two of Harry's comrades lie dead close to him.

Suddenly he discovers his ammunition belt to be empty, and as he gropes about his blouse his fingers come in contact with the cartridge he had thought to ever cherish for remembrance's sake.

"A life for a life," he finds himself repeating, and daily wonders to himself where and by whom the quotation was first used. "Never mind!" he says aloud. "It hits my case," and as he catches sight of a dark face peering from behind a log some hundred yards distant he slips the load into his gun chamber, takes steady aim and fires. Intuition tells him he has struck his mark, and an instant later the cry runs along the trench that the redskins are in full flight as the blue coated boys leap to their feet and give chase. Harry hurries to the Indian he has laid low in battle and, stooping down, sees a warrior past middle age, his face furrowed by an unsightly scar, while from the dead brave's belt the young man's eye catches the gleam of something like gold. Quickly he seizes it. "Why, it's a locket suspended by a strand of hair!" he exclaims, and as he grips the trinket in his hand a spring flies back and reveals a face so similar, yet to him far more fair than one he had been asked to look upon two weeks before, while the soft eyes seem to tell him in unspoken language that it is the likeness of the being most sacred to his heart upon whom he now gazes.

"Mother, I've found you!" he cries, and throws himself with violent sobs to the ground, the miniature crushed to his breast.

Destiny had been fulfilled. Anita Ainsworth was at last avenged.—Chicago News.

How One Cat Drinks.

Portland reports a cat that will only drink Sebago water from a faucet. When she is thirsty, she perches herself on the sink and mews piteously until some one comes to her relief. The faucet is turned on just enough so that the water drops slowly, and the cat cranes her head, and as each drop leaves the faucet out goes her tongue like a flash to catch it. Sometimes when the drops come too rapidly, Floss varies her mode of drinking by catching several of them in one paw and then sipping the water daintily therefrom.—Bangor Commercial.

LITTLE BILLIE.

The summer sun lingered below the western hills; the blue sky reddened and dimmed; the clear air sounded with the din of voices. It was twilight at Placer Diggings. Over in the barroom of the Red Racer a piece of brown meat paper, pasted untidily on the big gilded mirror at the back of the bar, bore the following notice:

"Lost, Straid er Stole—The baby of this camp, Little Billie. Seen last by Crippul Jake, foolin with Duffy's pup, & ain't seen since. 100 oz. dust reward for his return. Sined by Oleander Slump, Prop. Red Racer hotel—for the cityzuns of Placer Diggings."

This placard had been posted the day before, and every one who had visited the bar since—it is safe to add this would include about the whole population of the community—knew the purport of the sign. Different searching parties had organized immediately and had hunted with lanterns all that night, but up to this time Little Billie had not been found.

Out on the splintered porch of the Red Racer a motley lot of unkempt men were discussing the situation. They were now trying to explain satisfactorily the difference between lost and strayed. This evoked heated discussion. It was finally conceded that if the little fellow had simply strayed he must surely have found his homeward way before this; therefore he must be lost.

Little Billie was as good as an orphan. His mother had died soon after he was born, and his father had gone off with a Scandinavian prospecting in Rickety gulch, never after returning. The helpless baby was taken by kind, homely Uncle Billie Sykes to his shanty. There he grew and became a rugged, solid little fellow. He was not particularly handsome, if one judged the eyes, nose and mouth as factors of beauty, and his ears were large for a baby of his size; besides, he was often obstinate, having a stout infant will of his own. But withal he was so chubby, contented and generally good natured—no one in Placer Diggings had ever heard him cry—that the whole camp had come to love and to look upon him as community property.

It happened that when Uncle Billie became his self appointed guardian pay dirt had been running low at the diggings. No one had struck a nugget for days and the miners as a whole were in slow luck. The next day after the adoption, however, Uncle Billie had struck a rich opening. Others followed.

Now there is no especial reason, other than a miner's tendency for attributing lucky turns to most trivial things, why this fortunate turn of affairs should have been charged to the foundling's account, but such it was, and henceforth he had been the mascot of Placer Diggings.

Months went on apace. Little Billie grew wonderfully robust and healthy in the crisp mountain air, and up to this time good luck had continued at Placer Diggings.

Tonight the grizzled men who had gathered in front of the Red Racer were sober. Mindful of his loss, each grew reminiscent, all seemingly trying to outdo one another in telling of acts done that would demonstrate each his own devotion to Little Billie.

Lank Sam Boswick, a shrewd New Englander who had first come west to teach a school at Redwood Flat, but who later began mining, having been discharged as schoolmaster for persisting to deceive young minds by asserting that the world was round, when every one of the school trustees knew that it was flat, commenced in his Yankee drawl:

"Waal, of it hadn't ben fur me Billie would 'a' ben done fur long ago. I'm guessin yow boys'll rekerleck the time he fell down shaft 3 an cut his head open—nigh four inch on his forrud—course yow will. Waal, ez I wuz sayin, Billie wouldn't 'a' ben here to git lost of I hadn't 'a' found him 'n boosted him out of that pit in my arms, when he'd 'bout bled to death."

The half witted Chinese cook of the Red Racer stood leaning against a tree stump the while. Finally he, too, voiced his pigeon English, and no one sought to check him:

"Me heap solly, Lil' Billie he go way, no come back. He come see me some time allee day. I give him heap lot eat. Ver' solly no know where he go. Allee samee no come back he'p long time. Luck, he say goo'by, no come back some more too."

And the felt soled heathen shuffled toward the doorway, pulling dejectedly at the silken end of his cue.

At length the turn came for Uncle Billie. The old miner was visibly affected while speaking, for he was growing feebler as each season passed. Hesitatingly he spoke and ended by saying:

"Nuthin hez bucked me ekal ez heerd sense my ol pard kicked the bucket over on Gopher mountain. I'd l'arned t' luv the little critter lik' my own flesh an blood, an it wuz all fired heerd t' lose him, an long o' him our batch uv luck."

As he finished the freckled parson, a fellow with a bleached, ropy beard, bellowed a noisy "Ay-men!"

Late that afternoon Lim Kee was slicing a flitch of bacon in that part of the Red Racer hotel which served as kitchen and washroom when he heard a noise at the door. He opened it, and there was Little Billie.

The next moment the Chinaman seized a big tin horn that hung over a rifle on the board wall, and leaning far out of the one window blew blast after blast in quick succession. The sounds went echoing and re-echoing among the gulches and ravines. This was the signal agreed upon in case a fire should break out when most of the miners were away at work.

Immediately breathless men came swarming to the hotel from all quarters. The cause of the commotion was soon apparent. The sleek heathen was jumping up and down on the soap box that was used as doorstep, his teeth chattering nervously as he jabbered:

"Lil' Billee he come back. I blow hoin. He now come. I heep blow blow."

Lim Kee was happy with the happiest. The men beamed, shook one another's hands, slapped each other's backs, and then stepped into the bar of the Red Racer for a drop of good fellowship in celebration of their mascot's return.

And Little Billie! Not one whit disturbed, he quietly turned and bent toward a bunch of sage stubble growing near the door. For Little Billie was a burro.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Mental Phenomena.

"I suppose," said the visitor at the insane asylum, "that you have frequent occasions to note that people under your charge are entirely sensible on some particular topics."

"Yes," answered the superintendent. "The good sense they show on general subjects is amazing. For instance, never since I have been here have I heard of a movement among the inmates to get up a six day bicycle race."—Washington Star.

A MAN'S USE.

"The longer I live the more unnecessary seems to me the companionship of man," the first vice president was saying emphatically. "Except for a few primitive uses, the world might very comfortably progress without him. Certainly he is no aid to society, no particular good in the daily offices of life, no strong factor in its daily pleasures, no"—

"I beg your pardon," interrupted the charter member. "Do you ever go into a candy store?"

"The question is irrelevant, but I do, madam; occasionally I do."

"Do you go generally with a gentleman or alone?"

"Madam, as I before stated, I go sometimes into a candy store, but not often, and always unaccompanied. In fact, I find such difficulty in getting waited upon that"—

"I knew it!" gasped the charter member exultantly. "I knew it! To attend defenseless ladies in candy shops is one of the first uses of man. I've gone alone. I've wandered to the bonbon case and besought a well dressed damsel behind it to put me up a pound of marrons glace. She never heard me"—

"Then patiently I have moved on to the chocolate division and ordered some of the dusky mixed, but the maiden fair was invariably waiting with lavish smiles upon some bewildered man and was asking him how he would like the box tied—with heliotrope ribbons or with pink! So I have progressed from marrons to peppermint drops and then back to molasses candy and burnt almonds.

"Perhaps at the end of the line I found a new girl, all unaccustomed as yet to the business, and she would deign to fill me a box with exactly the sort of sweets that I didn't want."

"I confess that is a good deal like my own experience. But what of it?" asked the vice president impatiently.

"Simply that I found a remedy. Now when I want to get a box of candy in a hurry I just coerce one of my male friends or relatives into accompanying me. Immediately one of the pretty girl clerks comes smiling up and we are served instanter! Anyhow, I've discovered another vital and important use for man. We need him every time we go into a candy store!"

"Of course she does," whispered the vice president savagely, "for then he takes the check and she takes the candy. No wonder she has good times and money in the bank!"

"Really," said the oldest member, beaming over her glasses, "I wonder if that doesn't explain an odd little experience of mine?"

"Tell it, tell it."

"Well, a few months ago, having come from an exhausting club session, I met my brother-in-law and we went into one of those nice candy shops and soda water places all in one. I thought I would take a cup of chocolate or beef tea to refresh me, but my brother-in-law saw a sign announcing milk punch, and suggested that we try some. It was good. It tasted of milk and it tasted of something else. I liked it.

"A few days later Clarissa and I went in together and ordered milk punch. It came—and it tasted just like milk! I was disappointed, but I know how things will occasionally go wrong, so I said never a word. In the meantime I had told several other women about the delicious milk punches at N.'s. They went after them, but told me that they really couldn't see what I had raved over. The beverage seemed to them a good deal like milk dashed with a little nutmeg and sugar.

"Again and again have I sought the same counter for the same beverage, but never again have I found it as I did with my brother-in-law."

The club sat silent for a minute or two, and then began an ominous musical swelling through the ranks and increasing in volume until it passed from "Let's go and try for ourselves" to "We will go at once."

And they did go. They invaded that water place, occupying every seat around the counter and every spidery metal chair about the hard little round tables so shining and suggestive of artificial teeth. As one woman they ordered milk punch! It came, and it was milk! There was a flash of comprehension from member to member, and then the plaint began at the top and was taken up by each along the line, exactly as soldiers answer to the roll call.

"I want spirits in mine!"

"I want spirits in mine!"

"I want spirits in mine!" from the stern orotund of the president to the frightened squeaking treble of the newest member.

The individual hairs stood on end upon the heads of the white jacketed and aproned young men behind the counter, and the girl clerks cowered over against the mirrors so that their reflection would be doubled, and they should feel the safety of numbers.

"Are they escaped from the asylum?"

"Are they clean crazy?"

"Have they been drinking?" passed from terrified mouth to mouth.

The proprietor of the store came along. The oldest member was nudged by the president, and she replied to his inquiry:

"Sir, I want a milk punch, and I want it just the same as the one I got here with my brother-in-law. I want"— But her voice trailed off into a broken whisper of affright.

The eyes of the proprietor brightened with understanding. He tasted a little of the repudiated punch, put it down with a wry face and called to his white aproned minions, "Here, fix these punches up in a gentlemanly way for these ladies."

In an aside he said disgustedly, "Oh, these old gray headed women who drink."

But the grumblers got their rightful punch, and it was the kind in which the spirits moved. For in one instance complaining brought what was desired, and to this the members point as justification for the fundamental policy of their organization.

It was a triumph because a case in point where women exacted the same public service as men, and upon the same terms. But it takes a lot of women to do that, and it is not given to all of us to go about in crowds.—Exchange.

The Hand and Disease.

The study of physiognomy and of the hand is curiously interesting. It is now generally admitted that a person's character can be gauged with a very considerable degree of accuracy by a visual analysis of the features, and the same remark applies, with less force perhaps, to a study of the hand. The fact that in certain diseases the expression of the face and the appearance of the hands are fairly reliable indices of the nature and progress of the disease is too well known to require further emphasis. It would certainly appear to be more likely that the study of the hand is deserving of closer attention than is usually bestowed on the subject by medical men in general practice.—Exchange.

OLD DUELING RULES.

"MUCH USEFUL ADVICE" FROM AN ANCIENT BOOK.

If the Combatant Dies as a Result of the Encounter, He Is Told to Go Off With as Good Grace as Possible. Irishmen Not Good Seconds.

To Englishmen dueling is happily a lost art, but three-quarters of a century ago dueling was sufficiently in vogue to induce an anonymous writer to publish a book "containing much useful information," ironically dedicated to Daniel O'Connell, Esq., M. P., and James Silk Buckingham, Esq., M. P., as "entertaining the opinion first promulgated by the immortal Falstaff of happy memory that discretion is the better part of valor."

The author advises "all my countrymen who go abroad to use the pistol instead of the sword when they have the choice of the weapon, as the balance of killed and wounded is now much in favor of the French, who, upon the termination of the late war, amused themselves by occasionally spitting some half dozen of our traveling young fashionables before breakfast." He recommends "Purdey, in Oxford street, as the maker of the best dueling pistol locks," care in the selection of a stock which fits the hand comfortably and to eschew "saw handles." Barrels should be ten inches long and half rifled, which, considering that throughout his volume he poses as a man of the strictest honor, is puzzling, for he admits that a wholly rifled pistol is considered an unfair weapon therefore one not appearing to be rifled should be substituted.

On "the chances" he writes: "Many a poor, long armed, straggling fellow has received the coup di (sic) coeur (or fatal stroke) who might still have been in existence had he known how to protect his person in the field," the necessary protection consisting in standing sideways and drawing in the stomach. "Should the party be hit"—presumably because he could not draw in his stomach—"he must not feel alarmed." This seems difficult, as a man with a bullet in his stomach can hardly be expected not to display some little natural anxiety, for, as is admitted later, "a shot in the digestive organs must be particularly annoying to a bon vivant." To aldermen his advice is "the old method of fighting—the back to the adversary and discharging over the shoulder." "The chances of a man's being killed are about 14 to 1, and of his being hit about 6 to 1." He arrives at this conclusion by dividing a man's body, when opposed to his adversary, into nine parts. Therefore he says, "As in only three of these a wound would prove mortal, the chances are 3 to 1 against his being killed, and 5 to 1 against his being hit—that is, however," he hastens to add, "provided his antagonist has never read my work. If he has, the case may be different!"

The combatant is told "not to allow the idea of becoming a target to make him uneasy, but to treat the matter jocosely." He is to laugh away the evening over a bottle of port, and play a rubber of whist, but he must avoid drinking to excess or taking "any food that tends to create bile," because "bilious objects are not seen either distinctly or correctly." This would rather be a valid reason for getting as bilious as possible. A man with an attack of jaundice should be invisible, and able to blaze at his antagonist in perfect safety. If he cannot sleep on retiring to rest, he is to read Byron's "Childe Harold." His servant is to call him at 5 and give him a strong cup of coffee. Then he is to smoke a cigar, and "on his way to the scene of action" he is to take a brandy and soda, as a most "grateful stimulant and corrective."

No wonder our author recommends him at this point to draw in his stomach. "If he dies, he is to go off with as good grace as possible!" On the other hand, if he hits his antagonist, he is to take off his hat to him and express regret.

A challenge is not to be in rhyme, such as "a certain poetical, brandy loving major general of marines" wrote to a brother officer who ran off with his wife:

Wounds on the flesh a surgeon's skill may heal,
But wounded honor's only cured with steel.

An Irishman is not to be chosen as second, for nine out of ten have such an innate love of fighting they cannot bring an affair to an amicable adjustment, and the first duty of a second is to prevent the affair coming to a serious issue. Other advice is for the second to take care his principal is not inconvenienced by the sun, and to get his antagonist with something dark behind him, when it will be much more easy to hit him.

As may be inferred, the author holds by dueling, for "the man who falls in a duel and the individual who is killed by the overturn of a stagecoach are both unfortunate victims to a practice from which we derive great advantages. It would be absurd to prohibit stage traveling because occasionally a few lives are lost by an overturn, and unless men endeavored to destroy each other they might live to a patriarchal age and multiply so rapidly that the soil would soon be insufficient to supply them with nourishment," with which reductio ad absurdum the volume may well be put back on the shelf.—Navy and Army Illustrated.

A Double Headed Bull.

On the occasion of a public reception at Napier, Australia, the school children of the town, after being duly complimented by his excellency from County Tyrone on the hearty manner in which they had rendered the national anthem, were solemnly assured that if they put their shoulders to the wheel they would be sure to reach the top of the tree! Upon which a compatriot turned to me and said, "Sure, it was an axletree he meant, bedad."—Spectator.

MYSTERIOUS LIGHT AT SEA.

Three Steamers Didn't Understand It, but the Prince of Monaco Knew.

The Prince of Monaco has been known since 1885 as an enthusiastic student of the sea and its various forms of life. He usually spends his summers in the study of oceanographic problems, and his cruises have on some occasions been extended almost to the coasts of America. He delivered a lecture before the Royal Geographical society in London in which he told this incident:

One afternoon, while in the bay of Biscay, he sank the trap in which he collected specimens of sea life. It went to the bottom in over 12,000 feet of water, and as night approached he fastened to the wire attached to it an electric buoy and then stood off a mile or so. It did not happen to occur to him that he was right in the track of steamers plying between northern Europe and the Mediterranean, but he was reminded of the fact later.

As he and his 14 sailors were watching with a good deal of satisfaction the swaying buoy with its brilliant illumination a steamer's lights came into view. It was soon evident that the steamer was curious to know the meaning of the illumination, for she altered her course and made for the light. She knew that no fishing boats came out so far from land and so determined to solve the mystery. Up she came to within a quarter of a mile of the buoy, slowed up for a minute, and then started ahead, perhaps a little disgusted at the incident that had lured her several miles out of her course.

She had hardly got away when a second steamer came into view, and she, too, bore down upon the lighted buoy. The marines on the prince's vessel understood by this time that the illumination was probably believed to be evidence of a disaster. Just as the prince's steamer was moving up to explain matters she was nearly run down by one of the large liners in the oriental trade, which had also left her course to render what assistance she could.

The swell was very heavy, and the prince feared a collision as the three vessels approached the light like moths around a candle. He therefore veered off and the other vessels, after standing by for a few minutes, went on their way and probably never learned the cause of that night's illumination at sea.

But the incident gave the prince a pointer. He carefully refrained thereafter from exhibiting his electric buoy on any of the much traveled ocean routes.—New York Sun.

FOOLED IN A HORSE TRADE.

This Animal Possessed Several Remarkable Traits.

A prominent English landlord was one day riding across a common adjacent to his preserves when he overtook one of his tenants, who was also mounted. After the usual salutations they rode on in silence for some minutes, when the tenant slightly spurred his horse, a balky animal, whereupon it dropped to its knees.

"What's the matter with your horse?" asked his lordship. The embarrassed tenant remarked by way of explanation that his steed always acted that way when there was game to be found.

A moment later, to the tenant's satisfaction and surprise, a frightened hare jumped out of some bushes near by.

This so impressed the landlord that he at once drove a bargain by which he secured the tenant's barebacked beast in exchange for his own fine mount, perfectly saddled. With much agility the tenant leaped to his new horse, and all went well until they came to a small stream, whereat the landlord's new nag immediately balked. A drive home with the spurs brought it again to its knees.

"Hello, what's up now? There's no game here," said his lordship.

"True, my lord," was the ready reply, "but I forgot to tell you 'ee's as good for fish as 'ee is for game."—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Audience Got Angry.

There was a scene of wild excitement during the last week of May, 1892, at the Gaiety, London, and all owing to the singular behavior of a policeman. Two popular entertainers were on the stage, and one of them asked the audience a little conundrum, "Why is a policeman an utter scoundrel?"

A gentleman in blue who was apparently on duty in the body of the theater at once took offense. He jumped on to the stage and, seizing the offender, attempted to drag him off.

The audience rose in indignation. Men shook their fists and shouted, "What has he done?" One frenzied young lady in the front of the gallery seized a tumbler and would have thrown it at the policeman if her arm had not been arrested.

The policeman then dragged his captive off the stage amid the hisses and shouts of the audience. But anger was speedily changed to laughter when Mr. Policeman reappeared with his victim and stood revealed as one of the Cosmo trio. I never saw an audience so completely taken in.—London Correspondence.

Pigs and Witchcraft.

Two women of the lower class were quarreling violently the other evening in Heavitree, a suburb of Exeter. One yelled to the other: "You wretch, you always keep a black and a white pig, so that you can witch us! You ought to be scragged!" The one so addressed, it seems, has lived in her cottage some 20 years. She has during this period, it is said, always kept a couple of pigs, one of each color, and her neighbors consider she does this so that she may enjoy the very questionable powers of witchcraft. No butcher in the neighborhood will buy her pigs, as if he was known to do so he would certainly lose the local custom upon which he relies.—Notes and Queries.

SURPRISED HER HUSBAND.

Why the Young Wife Spent an Afternoon In His Office.

Young Mrs. Smith, who lives down on Prairie avenue, is very fond of her husband and also very jealous of him. Mr. Smith knows this and enjoys it immensely. Before the Smiths were married he used to know a Minneapolis girl who visited his sister in Chicago. Mrs. Smith knew her very well too. The Minneapolis girl came down not long ago, and Mrs. Smith called on her. A few days before the Minneapolis girl went back she called on Mrs. Smith, and they had an enjoyable quarter of an hour thinking things about one another and talking about Mansfield.

When the Minneapolis girl rose to go, she said sweetly, "Oh, by the way I want to see Charlie before I go back and I think I may just drop into his office this afternoon."

"Oh, do; Charlie will be delighted," returned Mrs. Smith. The door had hardly closed on the guest before Mrs. Smith executed a sort of war dance. She dressed as fast as she could, put on her bonnet and announced her intention of going down to Mr. Smith's office. Her grandmother remonstrated in vain. Mrs. Smith is only 18, and she is jealous.

"I thought I'd spend the afternoon with you," she announced to the astonished Charlie as she swept into the office.

"But, my dear"— he began, while Mrs. Smith ensconced herself at the side of his desk and intimated that the most violent arguments would not move her. She sat there all the afternoon. The Minneapolis girl enjoyed herself shopping, and forgot to call to tell Charlie goodby. Mrs. Smith broke down and confessed as soon as she got home, and her foolish young husband told her to go down next day and buy herself the prettiest hat she could find.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

JOHN HAY'S BIG APRON.

One of the Cases Where Dishwashing Produced a Poet.

Colonel Hay was when a boy a regular attendant of the Presbyterian Sunday school at Warsaw, Ills.

The Sunday school lessons partly consisted of committing to memory Bible verses, and to attain supremacy in this created quite a rivalry among the scholars. John Hay was sure to come out ahead from two to five answers, sometimes more, causing those of his comrades who were always behind him to regard him with envy.

Consequently when some of those boys heard that John had to wash dishes and do the churning for his mother and more than all, that he wore an apron while at these duties his jealous comrades fairly crowed.

One morning it was agreed by his comrades to get him out of doors while he had his apron on and humiliate him by having two or three girls whom he rather liked ask him questions in regard to his housework.

Young Hay came out to where the boys were and answered the questions by saying that he washed dishes as his mother taught him, and then, with twinkling eyes, he gave the dishpan which he had with him a tremendous fling, contents and all, drenching whoever happened to be near enough, and laughing loudly, ran into the kitchen. Hay and his big apron were never molested after that.—Christian Endeavor World.

A Kissing Nation.

In no other part of the world is kissing so much in vogue as in Russia. From time immemorial it has been the national salute. Indeed it is more of greeting than a caress.

In public affairs, as in private, the kiss is an established custom. Fathers and sons kiss, old generals with rusty mustaches kiss, whole regiments kiss. The emperor kisses his officers. On a reviewing day there are almost as many kisses as shots exchanged. If a Lilliputian corps of cadets have earned the imperial approval, the imperial salute is bestowed upon the head boy, who passes it on with a hearty report to his neighbor, he in his turn to the next, and so on, through the whole juvenile body.

On a holiday or fete day the young and delicate mistress of a house will not only kiss all her maidservants, but all her menservants, too, and if the gentleman does not venture above her hand she will stoop and kiss his cheek.

To judge also from the number of salutes the matrimonial bond in those high circles must be one of uninterrupted felicity. A gentleman scarcely enters or leaves the room without kissing his wife either on her forehead, cheek or hand.

Heroes of the Pen.

The intensity of application with which the mind follows whatever it lays hold of in literary pursuits is exemplified in the case of Robert Ainsworth, a celebrated writer and antiquarian of the seventeenth century. He had been for years engaged in a voluminous Latin dictionary, and while fascinated with this heroic work gave so little time and attention to his wife that he incurred her bitterest jealousy, and before the work was quite complete she committed the whole to the flames. Instead of abandoning himself to despair, Ainsworth set to work and rewrote it, accomplishing the entire work in time. The same bitter disappointment was endured with similar heroism by Carlyle when the manuscript of his "Frederick the Great" was destroyed by fire.

Unexpected.

The tramp had been very impertinent and dictatorial until the hired man unexpectedly made his appearance and inquired, "Are you lookin fur a scrap?"

His manner changed entirely, and at once he answered, "Yes, sir, that's what I'm lookin fur—a scrap o' cold turkey or cold ham or anything that happens to be handy."—Washington Star.

GAME LAWS

A Marshall County Man Wants Them Changed.

A correspondent of the Warren Sheaf living in Marshall county, north of this city, has the following to say in regard to the game laws:

"Permit me to say a few words about our game laws. The Minnesota legislature has from time to time changed our game laws and has sought the best way to save the state's noblest wild animals, such as moose, deer and caribou, from destruction. But in spite of all these provisions of the law our nice game is getting more scarce every year. A few years ago the state appropriated a large sum of money to have the law enforced, and offered reward to such persons who would give evidence for the state and make complaint against violaters of the law, but this paragraph of the law has brought no practical results in Marshall, Kittson, Roseau and Polk counties. If the people in neighborhood know that some one has violated the game law, they only talk about it among themselves, but no one need think that one will make complaint against another. And there are good reasons for being thus. In the first place there is a sort of dislike on the part of most people to be connected with a lawsuit in any shape or manner, and in the second place it is often the case that in new settlements where unlawful hunting is practiced, all are more or less guilty. The third and greatest cause why one hates to make complaint, is that such person would get the law-breaker as his permanent enemy, and perhaps the whole neighborhood would be down on him, and there are few who are brave enough to face this.

"In place of giving reward to private complainants, I would suggest that the state pay special detectives to watch at certain seasons. Pot hunters and unprincipled persons have during the past years begun to hunt moose in a rather strange way. It has been found that in the summer time, when mosquitoes are thick, deer and moose will wade out into the water to protect themselves, and the hunter, watching his opportunity, can without trouble shoot them to no benefit for either himself or others. Many stately moose have been killed in this manner, only to satisfy the hunters' craving to destray. The Crookston papers last fall told about a man and his hired man who shot two moose in Clearwater river, and this is only one of many instances. Two years ago when the snow was four to ten feet deep, there was wholesale slaughtering of moose and deer in the northeastern part of our county. The animals were, on account of the deep snow, deprived of their food, and on top of the snow an icy crust had formed which cut the skin and flesh from their legs and feet, and under such conditions they were wholly at the mercy of these conscienceless hunters. An old man told me that he was witness to a scene that he can never forget. He met a flock of animals who were being pursued by a hunter, as they passed by he could see how the flesh was torn off their legs and feet to the very bones, while the hunter glided forward easily on his Norwegian "skis" firing shot after shot without hitting. This was cruelty to animals of the worst kind, and the state ought to try to prevent it by having detectives on the lookout at times when the danger is greatest. Such things happen far away from the settlements, and the game wardens in the cities and villages know nothing about it."

FRAUDS

In the Cutting of the Dead and Down Timber.

Washington, Feb. 2.—Information has been received by several Minnesota members that a large number of frauds have been discovered in the cutting of green timber in the operations known as the dead-and-down timber cutting on the Chippewa reservations in Minnesota. It is claimed that the facts disclosed are that upwards of forty million feet of green timber has been cut in these operations. The facts have been laid before Commissioner Hermann, of the general land office, who said that they will be promptly investigated.

It is unnecessary to say that this information was a great surprise to Commissioner Hermann, who has always believed from the official reports sent to him and from all the informations he had obtained that the dead-and-down timber operations were singularly free from such frauds as the cutting of green timber in violation of the law and regulations. It will be remembered that in his report and published utterances on this subject the commissioner has said that the amount of green timber cut was insignificant and not worthy of consideration, but if the information which comes privately can be relied upon, and is said to emanate from absolutely reliable sources, the dead-and-down timber operations included the cutting of approximately forty million feet of green timber.

Chippewa Complaints.

Washington, Feb. 2.—The Chippewa Indian delegation appeared before the house committee on Indian affairs today. The first matter touched on was the expense of maintaining Chippewa commissioner Dar S. Hall. They want the office abolished and his work placed in the hands of the Indian inspector. The next complaint made was against the estimators. The Indians want estimating stopped and the Menominie system of disposing timber adopted. The dead and down timber operations were not discussed.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

ALEXANDRIA is one of the best governed little villages in the state of Minnesota. It has a population of 2,500 and it pays out in salaries each year is $600. The real estate valuation is $449,230 and personal property $240,647. Taxes are of course very low.

THE X. I. T. ranch, in the extreme northwest corner of the Panhandle of Texas, the largest ranch in the world, has an area of five thousand square miles. Its herds of cattle aggregate 120,000 head, besides 1500 horses, and the calf crop branded in 1897 exceeded 31,000. Surprising as it may seem, all the work on the ranch is done by 125 men, one man to every 24,000 acres. —February Ladies' Home Journal.

THE women of Pelican Rapids, Minn., have decided that the "blind pigs" of that village must be closed. Accordingly 200 of them have formed a society, and are working with apparently good success. On each morning as soon as the "blind pigs" are opened up several women enter and loaf around for a few hours until they are relieved by others, and in this way a committee is kept in the saloons all day. They are trying to collect evidence, and also frighten away the patrons.

Mr. F. HIBNER feels that the NEWS did him an injustice in its report of the McMahon-Weltmer case and says so in a communication in the Press. He quotes an "old judge in the East"—Michigan we presume—as saying that he always allowed the defeated party to "cuss the judge and winning lawyer." And then Mr. Hibner insinuates that he has been liberally cussed for winning so many cases. We do not wish to argue with this successful and learned gentleman upon this or any other subject. If he is a successful practitioner before the claptrap justice courts, he is entitled to all the glory there is in it. In regard to the McMahon-Weltmer case, we have nothing to apologize for. We told the truth, except in a few unimportant and technical matters, such as misspelling a man's name and in giving the date of Mrs. Weltmer's death. Nothing derogatory of Mr. Hibner was said and, although we may have a private opinion regarding a man who for a paltry fee of perhaps $5 would rob the natural mother of her daughter, we refrain from expressing it.

IN writing an article on the colonial policy, Capt. A. T. Mahon very wisely says: "We have the two great examples. Great Britain has been, in the main, and increasingly beneficent and strong. Spain, from the very first, as the records show, was inhumanly oppressive to the inferior races; and, after her own descendants in the colonies became aliens in habit to the home country, she to them also became tyrannically exacting. But, still more, Spain became weaker and weaker as the years passed, the tyranny of her extortions being partially due to exigencies of her political weakness and to her economical declension. Let us, however, not fail to observe that the beneficence as well as the strength of Great Britain has been a matter of growth. There is, therefore, no reason to despair, as some do, that the United States, which shares her traditions, can attain her success. The task is novel to it; it it may make blunders; but, guided by her experience, it should reach the goal more quickly."

THE Ortonville Journal, in reading the riot act to the citizens of that place, gives some very good advice, which has a local application. The Journal says: "A town never amounts to anything more than its citizens make it. If they are wideawake, enterprising and public spirited, then the town will become such. If upon the contrary they are selfish and lack public spirit, the town will never progress. In every community there are two classes—one which believes in helping push and improve the town. They never hesitate to contribute time and money. The other class is always kicking and holding back and either never contribute a dollar to the public or do so grudgingly and very sparingly, but are always on the alert to make every nickel upon such occasions when the enterprise of others have resulted in attracting a crowd to town. Whatever benefits a community as a whole benefits every individual residing therein directly or indirectly, and the enterprising and progressive class is entitled every time to the business patronage of the community at large."

THE beautiful results of free silver are well illustrated by a correspondent of the Chicago Record, who is traveling in Spain. He says: "To the stranger one of the most annoying features of a visit to Spain is the unpleasant way the currency has of jumping up and down without any apparent cause, to which must be added the almost certain conviction that if your landlord helps you to get your money changed—a necessity that will arise—he is holding back a goodly share of what is rightfully yours. Any of the brethren at home who are in favor of a currency change ought to be sent over to Spain or Portugal for a brief personal experience with a money that may vanish over night. I came into Spain with French currency, which is as good as any, and always commands a premium. When at par the Spanish peseta is the exact equivalent of the French franc. On my first deal I sold 100 francs for 141.50 pesetas. Three days later at Madrid the market had changed and I could get only 130.50 pesetas, and so for three weeks it had been jumping about daily to a very appreciable extent. During the war there were days when you could almost double the franc on an exchange, and during the peace negotiations the market was wild on reports that the United States would do this, that and the other thing. At this moment a Spanish peseta is actually worth 13 American cents, but if at par it would be worth 20.3 cents. The prices charged by merchants and hotelkeepers do not seem to have risen with the rate of exchange, but the fluctuating currency is nevertheless a curse to the country and a source of annoyance and frequent loss to the stranger."

State Politics.

There can be little doubt that the Fusionists are quietly planning to elect a Fusion Legislature, two years hence and a good deal of shrewd political manouvering may be expected in nearly every legislative district in the state. The plan will, perhaps, be first of all to disorganize the Republican party. They will support anybody who is against the regular Republican nominee who can have any hope of being elected. In Republican strongholds, where there is no hope of electing a Democrat or Populist, an independent Republican candidate or a free silver Republican with Fusion endorsement will receive the Democratic support. The object is to get full control of the state government and if possible to elect a Democratic United States senator. Any one who has occasion to meet the many ambitious Democrats who come to the capital realizes fully how strong the Democrats feel they are since Lind's election. That appetite of forty years' standing is becoming more and more apparent and the Republicans who slept during the last campaign or who voted for Lind because he was "a good man" had better wake up.

• • •

There is another row in the Democratic camp which threatens to assume gigantic proportions. Gov. Lind has removed J. S. O'Brien as a member of the State Prison Board and has appointed in his place David Bronson, of Stillwater. O'Brien refused to accept his walking papers and will probably go into the courts to test whether the governor had any right to remove him. Gov. Lind's side of the story is that O'Brien, who was a candidate for surveyor of logs and lumber for the Stillwater district, had told the governor that in the event he was not appointed the could not "work together" in managing the affairs of the Prison Board. Gov. Lind claims this was improper and that O'Brien is not fit for the office. Mr. O'Brien denies the charges of the governor in toto and is, according to the reports, getting ready to make matters interesting for Lind. O'Brien has been a gold Democrat so his standing in the Lind camp is not very high, but he has many friends who will back him in his efforts to retain his place in spite of the governor. Many of Mr. Lind's adherents believe the governor has acted too hastily and that he made a mistake when he charged O'Brien with improper motives.

• • •

Israel Bergstrom, who during the past few campaigns has done such remarkably good work for the Republican ticket and who was rewarded for his services in a measure by being elected chief clerk of the House, is filling his new position admirably and to the satisfaction of all.

• • •

Lakefield Standard: Judging by his actions since his inauguration, Gov. Lind does not think as badly of the Republican administration of state affairs as he did during the campaign. He has discovered, perhaps, that under an uninterrupted rule of Republicanism, the business of the state has been conducted economically, wisely and well, and that his pre-election denunciation of the forty-year rule of the party was untrue and overdrawn. In actions, if not in words, Lind is making a tardy apology.

• • •

The twine investigation is now practically completed and the committee will, in a short time, submit its report to the Legislature. As has been stated before the committee has found no evidence that reflects upon the Prison management. The whole trouble seems to have been that farmers neglected to order in time. One witness who appeared before the investigation committee and who, it was believed, would give some evidence against the poison management, testified that he had ordered his twine the second day of June and was highly incensed because he did not get his order filled. His original letter was produced and one may imagine his surprise when he was shown that the letter was written the sixth day July.

Wedmer-LaBree.

In the presence of a few friends, Judge Johnson officiating, yesterday at high noon occurred the marriage of Albert LaBree and Miss Linda Wedmer. Both the contracting parties are well known in this city. The bride is a young and accomplished lady, and the the groom is a young man well known to everyone in this section. He is a son of that sturdy old pioneer, John LaBree, and has many friends. A dance will be given this evening in honor of the occasion.

Bruges.

The chronicles of 1456 speak of 150 vessels in its basins and of German merchants carrying away over 2,000 pieces of cloth to the distant lands of Russia and Poland. It was the exchange of Europe, possessing in the fourteenth century 52 guilds and 150,000 inhabitants, more than three times as many as it now contains. Among its wares we read of leather from Spain, wool from England, silk from Italy and Persia, linen and cloth from Brabant, hemp and flax from Holland, wine from Portugal, Greece and France and hardware from Germany, which included every variety of object in ivory, bone, wood, glass, tin, copper, lead, iron, silver and gold. It had its factories, its curriers, its dyers, and its taxation considerably exceeded that of Ghent. But at the commencement of the fourteenth century its troubles began—troubles from within and from without.

The Swene was rendered useless by the invasion of sand as far as Sluis (Ecluse), treachery, slaughter and political jealousies and rivalries completed the fall, and in 1544 its inhabitants had diminished to 7,696. Then came the religious wars and persecutions from 1567 to 1584, the fanatics and the Goeux destroying what remained, leaving little for the French revolutionists.—Good Words.

The postmaster at Deer River had a snap—while it lasted. He was in business as well as postmaster. When a bill for goods bought by him in his capacity as merchant was due he turned it over to himself as postmaster, and issued a money order to pay for the same. The scheme worked smoothly until a special examiner employed by Uncle Sam made a visit to Deer River. Now the postmaster is in jail at Duluth, and his accounts are short $4,000.

Lenten Regulations.

The Lenten regulations for 1899 in the Catholic church of the archdiocese, have been promulgated. They differ in no respect from the regulations of last year.

Ash Wednesday, first day of Lent, falls on Feb. 15. All the faithful except those legitimately excused or dispensed, are bound in conscience, under pain of grievous sin, to observe these regulations.

All days of Lent, Sundays excepted, are days of fast. The precept of fasting restricts the use of food to one meal towards the middle of the day and a collation in the evening, not exceeding the fourth part of an ordinary meal.

From the precept of fasting are excused those under 21 and over 60, the sick, those engaged in hard labor. By special pontifical indult, permission is granted working people in this country to use meat on all days of Lent, except Fridays, Ash Wednesday and Saturday of Holy Week.

Summer Schools.

State Superintendent Lewis, in a letter to county superintendents of the state, notifies them that, on account of the scarcity of funds, the number of summer schools for the year will have to be reduced from fourty-four to twenty-five or thirty. He suggests combinations of counties as a means to the above ends, and in the proposition is one at Crookston for Polk and Red Lake counties, at Hallock for Marshall, Kittson and Roseau counties.

THE SETTLERS

Want to Fish With Pound Nets in the Red Lake.

Senator O. H. Myran has introduced a bill which would be of considerable importance to this city should it pass. It is for the purpose of allowing actual settlers on the Red Lake to fish in pound nets. The St. Paul Globe says of it:

"Some suspicion has been aroused in certain quarters that the bill, S. F. 148, to permit the use of pound nets in lakes in this state having an area of more than 420 square miles, which applies only to Red lake, is drawn in the interests of a fishing company which has its main office in Minneapolis.

"It was sought at the last session of the legislature to secure the same privileges by a bill of a slightly different nature, but the bill failed to pass.

"The senate committee on fish and game laws considered the bill yesterday in public. Senator J. E. Jones (Rep.), of Stevens, and Senator Underleak (Rep.), of Olmstead, objected to the passage of the bill. Capt. Boushe, of the Red Lake Indian agency, and William Brown spoke in favor of its passage, saying that it would help the settlers, but as it is over 100 miles from the agency to the nearest point accessible by water routes. Thief River Falls, and as some of the members of the present state game and fish commission seemed to be suspicious of the purpose of the bill, the committee decided to defer action on this measure, as it did on another bill introduced yesterday, to permit actual residents to fish in lakes and streams in any season for their own consumption."

Log-Swiping.

The Crookston Lumber company has sustained a severe loss by the depredations of log thieves at various points along the Clearwater, and is after the guilty parties. A short time since they found upwards of 80 logs bearing their marks in the mill yard of Geo. Baird, in the new township of Johnson. Mr. Baird was taken to Crookston to answer to the charge of robbery, and persuaded the company that the logs had been brought to his mill by other parties. He was allowed to make an effort to secure the guilty parties, and the case was continued until later in the month. The company proposes to break up the practice of the ranchers of securing their lumber and fuel at its expense.

A Card Party.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Stebbins entertained another party at cards last Friday evening. The head prize was won by C. A. Robbecke and Emil Zeh carried off the foot prize. Those present were: Messrs. and Mesdames Emil Zeh, O. P. Johnson, C. A. Robbecke, Ira C. Richardson, C. J. Knox, C. L. Dobner, H. Lewin, Carl Kretzschmar, Dr. and Mrs. Grundy and Mrs. Minnie Caldwell.

NOTABLE STOCK SHOW.

One Hundredth Annual Exhibition of the Smithfield Club.

The hundredth annual show of the famous British Smithfield club was recently held at Islington and was attended by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York and other notables. The prince, says the London Illustrated News, was president of the club in the year of its centenary existence just closed and was a successful competing exhibitor as well as a donor of prizes and eminent royal patron, well sustaining the example set by his father, the prince consort, as founder of the Royal Agricultural society and a leading improver of cattle and other live stock. Their royal highnesses lunched with the council of the Smithfield club. The queen won two breed cups, three first prizes and two second prizes. The champion prizes and the centenary gold medal were awarded to Lord Strathmore for his Aberdeen-Angus heifer, declared to be the finest animal in the show. This heifer also gained the chief honors at the Birmingham cattle show. Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild was elected president for 1900.

THE QUEEN'S HEREFORD STEER.

Just a century ago, continues The News, in the good old days of farming, when American beef and Australian mutton were not, when sheep stealing was a hanging matter and wheat was low at 40 shillings a quarter, a Derbyshire farmer named Wilkes had an idea. Do not infer that farmers in general, or Derbyshire farmers in particular, ever lacked ideas. But the one which emanated from the fertile brain of Mr. Wilkes was an idea worthy of the capital I—almost an inspiration. This mental acorn, if one may use the expression, was the seed whence sprang the Smithfield Cattle and Sheep society. The laudable aim of the society was "to supply the cattle markets of Smithfield and elsewhere with the cheapest and best meat." Mr. Wilkes' idea was taken up with moderate enthusiasm, and in the following year, 1799, the first show was held in Dolphin yard, Smithfield. The society then counted 113 members. Their show consisted of two classes of cattle and two of sheep, and the value of the prize list was exactly 50 guineas. The scheme of classification adopted was almost medieval in its simplicity. "Beasts" fed on grass, hay, turnips or cabbages competed in one class; "beasts" fed on corn or cake in the other; sheep (be pleased to note that agricultural zoology recognizes only one beast) fed on grass, etc., competed together, and sheep fed on corn. Five years later the members' roll had increased by one, but the show was expanded to nine classes for beasts and sheep, opened its arms to the humble, unimproved pig and offered £215 5s. in prizes.

The era of real prosperity dawned with the spread of railways. In 1862, when the show was held for the first time at Islington, there were 80 classes, and over £2,000 was offered in prizes, while the members of the club numbered 400. At the show of 1898 there were 94 classes, containing 364 cattle, 640 sheep and 270 pigs, and the prize list fell short by £34 9s. of £5,000 in cash, cups and medals. It was possible for one steer or ox to win about £400 worth in money and gold and silver plate if he carried off every prize for which he was entered, including the prize of the centenary show—the Queen's Challenge cup, value £150. A pen of three sheep could bring their owner about £228, while a pair of triumphant pigs could win about £188.

Feeding Whey to Hogs.

Whey contains more nutritive value than it is popularly supposed to have. Though most of the fats and casein have been taken from it, there is a small proportion of both of these that goes through the press. These have some value, but not enough with the large proportion of water to be fed alone. There is also some sugar, which makes the pigs fond of whey, so they will eat until they are distended with whey, while growing poor in flesh and not gaining in weight at all. But mix some corn and oat meal with this whey and add the least bit of linseed meal, and the whey becomes altogether a different feed. It might be said that the whey contributes nothing of value to the ration. It does, for it makes it more palatable if given in moderation. The sweet in the whey makes it an appetizer, to encourage the animal to eat more than it otherwise would.—Boston Cultivator.

ENSILAGE IN FATTENING.

It May Be Injurious When Fed Cold in Winter.

Except in the small amounts that are useful to keep the bowels loose we doubt whether ensilage can be profitably fed to stock of any kind that is being fattened, says the Boston Cultivator. During this process the purpose of the feeder is to get water out of the animal rather than to encourage its increase. The arguments for feeding milk cows on ensilage will not apply for fattening animals. Indeed, when we were feeding beef cattle or sheep, we always found that during the later period, though the animals were wholly on dry food, they would drink very little, and when they had a few pumpkins additional they would often go through the day without drinking at all. If, then, ensilage were fed, though the animals might eat it, they would thereby get more water in their food than they required. In such cases it always resulted in watery stools passing off much of the meal that the animals ate without doing them any good.

In winter-time especially, and this is when ensilage is usually fed, it may often be actually injurious when it is fed cold, as it often is. When we mixed cut feed with scalding hot water, putting it on the cut hay or straw and then while hot adding meal to it, the partial cooking which the meat received made both it and the cut hay or straw more palatable. Fed thus, fattening beef cattle not only did not want but would not drink pure water, often for several days in succession. Possibly they might if the water had been offered warm as the cut feed was. Sheep require even less water than beeves. Only the ewes that are bearing lambs, or have lambs that are suckling, will drink much water. It is necessary for them, because it is necessary in making a good supply of milk. But the sheep that are fattening, or are store sheep, will scarcely take more than one or two sips a day. All who have watered milk cows know how heartily they will drink. Even those that are fed considerable ensilage will drink a good deal, and perhaps sometimes more than is good for them.

Ensilage is good for breeding animals and those that are giving milk. But in cold weather some dry food should be given daily, else the ensilage diet will make an animal lose flesh, unless it is also fed with some dry feed, both hay and grain. Stock fed early in winter on cornstalks do not need much water, as the natural juices of the stalk are not then dried out of them, and for this reason early in the winter is when cornstalks should always be fed.

No doubt in all the older states the feeding of cows for milk is what most winter feeding is done, and for these what is written in all the papers in favor of ensilage is all right. But, like every other good thing, ensilage has its limitations, and it may not be altogether useless occasionally to point out what these are.

Guessing Weight of Stock.

As this is "butchering time" on thousands of farms one of the best ways of training the eye to judge both of live and dressed weights of animals is now offered. If the farmer has some barn scales it is easy to secure the live weight of animals at any time. But there is great difference in the amount of waste in killing and dressing, even among animals of the same breed. It is this kind of knowledge that the buyer learns by long practice, and unless farmers want to be cheated in selling live stock they must learn also. When a boy on the farm the writer was encouraged to make his guess as to how much each hog or beef would weigh both alive and after it was dressed for marketing. It is knowledge that every boy on the farm should try to gain.—Boston Cultivator.

Mating Ewes With Large Rams.

Many farmers who have a flock of grade Merino ewes only medium in size are questioning whether it is safe to mate such ewes with rams of the coarse wool breed much larger than themselves. We think it is safe provided the ewes are young and vigorous. The fetus will not probably be much, if any, larger than it would from a native buck of their own size. The superiority of the lambs will not be in their increased size at birth, but in the rapid growth they will make and the quick response they will make to extra feed after the lamb gets old enough to eat it.—Boston Cultivator.

Age In Rams.

It is estimated that there are 50 per cent more ewe lambs in the range country this year than male lambs, a fact that may be traceable to the larger use of young rams and ram lambs than were formerly used on range flocks. If this be true, the theory of French experimenters that young sires get more ewe lambs than ram lambs is pretty well attested by American experience on a broader scale.—American Sheep Breeder.

Value of Sheep.

The American Sheep Breeder says that for a farmer a flock is better than a herd. It is more easily cared for in proportion of seven to one. Its good effect on the land in improving it for crops is far greater than that due to the feeding of cattle, and every farmer will find it to his interest to keep a flock, if only for the purpose of making the feeding of it one item of the regular rotation of crops.

Feed on Ranges.

A surplus of feed and fodder should be secured for the flock on the range. Due provision should be made for shelter probable to be needed. It is better to be sure of this than sorry for neglecting it. No man more than a shepherd needs to keep his head level. He must not get too elated by present good fortune or become depressed by and by at a possible change.—American Sheep Breeder.

"GRE[illegible]"

When Dr. John Adams married his young wife many people were good enough to favor him with their opinions on the matter. Some said he was an old fool to throw his money at the feet of an insignificant and penniless girl, others that he ought to be ashamed of himself to lead a young girl to bind herself to an old man for life, knowing it must be for his money alone.

Every one seemed to think "money" the leading factor in the case, and possibly Dr. John himself attached rather more importance to it than he should have done.

For many years, Eleanor Dene had been a poor patient of the doctor and accustomed to look to him as her only friend. When he first knew her, she was a miserable little half starved nursery governess. Then, when her constitution failed to bear the strain of overwork and underfeeding, it was through his help that she obtained the management of the "ladies' column" on a provincial paper. Such work being overremunerative, and the struggle to "make both ends meet" on an altogether insufficient income had for a long time past excited the old doctor's admiration and pity. He had tried in many different sly ways to help her, but her indomitable pride made this a difficult task.

Now, Dr. John Adams was a clever man, but he was altogether blind to the fact that while he respected and [illegible] for Eleanor from the bottom of his heart, her quiet, unemotional soul had been roused to such a pitch of reverential love for him as she would have found it impossible to entertain for a younger man.

That she should be so honored as to be chosen for the wife of this adored hero was an idea which bordered on the ridiculous. But when the matter was put to her as he put it such a marriage became not only a dream of happiness but a dear and holy duty.

On a certain day Dr. Adams had been led to consult a specialist on his own behalf. The verdict he received (which served to confirm what had long been his own suspicions), terrible though it would have seemed to most men, was met with calm fortitude.

Though not an old man, he felt that his book of life had been such a full volume, so crammed with incident that he could not complain if it was not spun out to the length of the conventional three volume, whereof the greater part is given to "padding." Thus, when he was told that the final chapter would be closed after no more than another two years, he was able to review the situation with equanimity, and to set about "making the best" of those two years.

Now, to "make the best" of Dr. John's time meant always the "best" for other people, not for himself. If it happened in this case that the "best" for Eleanor Dene meant also the "best" for him, he almost felt there must be something wrong somewhere.

However, mature consideration having convinced him that what Eleanor Dene needed was money, rest and care, and past attempts having shown him that no ordinary means would induce that obstinate young woman to accept any of these benefits, he at last resolved on the desperate expedient of asking her to marry him—his only qualm in the matter arising from the fact that it was just what he wanted most in the world.

What surprised people most was the fact of John Adams' known disapproval of marriages where there was considerable disparity of age between the contracting parties, for he had not considered it necessary to inform the world that life for him had suddenly diminished to a two years' lease.

But he told Eleanor. For a few moments he could almost fancy he was a young man again, and dare risk her answer on other grounds than those of gratitude and pity. But folly has its limits, and old John Adams was not the man to earn a snubbing with his eyes open. "So, you see, my dear," he said, "it would be a great charity on your part if you would come and take care of a poor old man—just for two years."

When the process of taking care of the old man was in full force, he began to view with [illegible] calmness the prospect of its short duration and to turn his attention specially to that branch of his profession which dealt with the disease from which he suffered. It seemed to him a fitting thing to devote these last months to the search for some yet undiscovered treatment which might, if commenced early enough, rob such cases as his own of some of their hopelessness.

When one of the precious years had flown, he began to see dim gleams of that he sought, and after awhile, experimenting on himself, he grew vaguely conscious of a half formed hope that perhaps it was not too late. With renewed vigor he pressed forward till, as his once allotted time drew near its close, he felt that he had been successful beyond his wildest hopes; that, though he could never recover, another ten years of life seemed no impossibility, and what a life! The last two years would have been one dear dream of peace but for this awful shadow, but ten years was practically an indefinite time. Then came the vision of his patient young wife, and the loving care she had bestowed upon him. What argument had he used to urge her to tie her young life to his? What but the assurance of an honorable man that he could not live longer than two years, and even that had seemed doubtful? All praise to that sweet soul whose grateful devotion to an old man had changed that doubt to certainty. Should he repay her nobleness by dooming her to waste the best years of her life as an old man's nurse—perhaps soon a querulous old man for whom she would not be able to feel even the gentle admiration to which he was accustomed? No, he would keep his word! She had played her part nobly. He would perform his.

People spoke with surprise of the crushing effect the loss of her "dear old husband" had on Mrs. Adams. "What did a young woman expect when she married an old man for his money? She had got that, and certainly she had nursed and tended him with great patience!"—Temple Magazine.

Demonstrative.

Mr. Chevalier was once singing in a small town not far from London. After the performance was over he remarked to the manager of the theater that the audience struck him as being very demonstrative.

"Do you think so?" asked the manager.

"Well, I thought they were if anything too enthusiastic," said the portrayer of coster life, "for they were knocking their umbrellas and sticks on the floor all the time I was on the stage."

"That wasn't applause," observed the manager. "You see, the postoffice is right above us, and they were stamping letters for the up mail."—London Standard.

KNOWN HERE

And. P. Swanstrom Indicted on Two Charges.

Andrew P. Swanstrom, of St. Paul, was last week indicted upon two charges by the grand jury of Ramsey county in connection with the defunct Order of Minnehaha. Mr. Swanstrom is well known in this city, he having visited his brother, J. W. Swanstrom, here several times. Of the affair the Pioneer Press says:

"The indictments were reported to Judge Kelly in the criminal branch of the district court late in the afternoon, and Mr. Swanstrom was at once placed under arrest. He was arraigned, plead not guilty and released on bail.

"Mr. Swanstrom was at one time the supreme secretary of the the Order of Minnehaha. It is alleged in the indictments against him that he embezzled $625.50 of the funds of the association, and that he committed perjury in that he swore to a false report to the insurance commissioner.

"The perjury indictment is considered the most serious. It is alleged that Jan. 20, 1898, Mr. Swanstrom swore to a report to the insurance commissioners and that the report contained, among other items of assets of the company, the statement that there was $658.56 in the bank to the credit of the company. This, it is claimed, was false.

"The embezzlement indictment charges grand larceny in the first degree, it being alledged that Mr. Swanstrom embezzled $625.50 of the funds of the order. It is claimed that during his term as supreme secretary he collected this amount and neglected to report it properly.

"The witnesses against Mr. Swanstrom before the grand jury was H. M. Temple, expert accountant; Elmer H. Dearth, insurance commissioner, and E. J. Hodgson, president of the Security Trust company as receiver of the defunct order.

"As soon as the indictments were presented in court Judge Kelly ordered bench warrants issued. These warrants were handed to Deputy Sheriff Robert, who placed Mr. Swanstrom under arrest. Mr. Swanstrom was notified of the fact that he had been indicted, and went at once to the county attorney's office, where he was arrested.

"Mr. Swanstrom is very well known in St. Paul. At present he is employed as chief deputy in the office of county treasurer, having been one of Mr. Arosin's prominent supporters during the last campaign. He is very prominent in secret society circles. For the last dozen or fifteen years he has held many high offices in his favorite order.

"When Mr. Swanstrom was arraigned in court he was without an attorney. He stated that his attorney, John H. Ives, was unable to leave the capitol, and asked that he be arraigned without an attorney. The indictments were read to him and he pleaded not guilty to both. At the suggestion of County Attorney Bigelow, he reserved the right to change his plea or make any motion his attorney should see fit.

"Judge Kelly fixed the bail at $1,500 in the perjury case and $750 in the larceny case. Frederick O. Hammer, Mayor Kiefer's secretary, and William R. Johnson, the county auditor, were presented as bondsmen. After a short examination they were accepted by the court, and after the recognizances were entered into Mr. Swanstrom left the court house.

"Mr. Swanstrom refused to discuss his indictment. "All I have to say," he said in reply to a question, "is that I am not guilty. All the records of the order are down stairs now, but they are to late for the grand jury to consider."

"Mr. Swanstrom's friends are convinced that he will come out of his trouble scathless. "The question of Mr. Swanstrom's guilt is to nonsensical to discuss," said one of his friends last evening. "As for the perjury case, Mr. Swanstrom had already served his connection with the Order of Minnehaha when the report was made. He simply made up the report to assist the man who succeeded him. As a matter of fact, the money was in the bank in spite of the indictment. It was in the shape of a certificate of deposit in one of the suspended banks. As to the larceny indictment, I am convinced that the state cannot show that Mr. Swanstrom collected a cent of money belonging to the order that was not turned over and entered in the books as it should have been."

"Auditor Johnson may have trouble as the result of his going on the bail bond. He is under bonds to the county, which bonds were issued to a surity company. Under the rules of the company he cannot go on bonds or sign notes. He referred the matter to the county attorney yesterday, but Mr. Bigelow stated that it would make no difference."

Wm. Mr. Larson says that if $10,000 is paid inside of twenty days he will drop the matter, if not he will sue the village for the full amount, $20,000. The village authorities not having that amount of cash in their jeans say they will not settle, and consequently the village of Climax will have a heavy suit on its hands.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

It is said that William Donaldson, the Minneapolis merchant, who recently died, carried $165,000 of life insurance.

The Great Northern railway has issued a brief descriptive pamphlet entitled "Greater America." It describes the newly acquired territory of the United States and points of the many advantages to be derived by the Northwest in commercial dealings with the Far East.

The state prison board has fixed the price of twine for the ensuing year. Manila twine will be 8 cents per pound and for half Manila and half sisal the price will be 7½ cents. The Manila twine will run 650 feet to the pound and the other 600. Farmers should order their twine early in the spring in order to secure the above prices.

Senator Sheehan has introduced a bill to extend the terms of all the county auditors in the state two years and make the term for these officers hereafter four years. It is contented in behalf of the bill that two years is too short a time for a new incumbent to master the details of the office, and that the bill will be a saving to the counties.

The Nestor farm of 64,000 acres in Barnes county, North Dakota, yielded, says the Times Record, the past year 25,000 bushels of wheat, 16,000 bushels of barley, 22,000 bushels of oats and 2,500 bushels of flax. The average yield of grain was: Wheat 18 bushels, barley 30 bushels, oats 44 bushels, flax 15 bushels. To handle this amount of land requires 110 head of horses. For utilizing the rough land Mr. Hester keeps a band of about 2,000 head of sheep and these are fed during the winter months on the straw, grain screenings and other feed which is allowed to go to waste on many farms. The sheep are a money making investment and do well.

At a meeting of the Iowa State Agricultural society, says the Farmer's Voice, J. S. Trigg of Rockford said a few words to the Iowa farmer that is not alone true of the farmers of that state. For the benefit of farmers everywhere we reproduce a notable paragraph: "While your name may be unknown outside of your own township, and while you may have neither stocks or bonds to your credit at the bank, and though you feel that you do not fill a very large place in the great world, know this—that your lot is one of the most favored on earth, and that many a millionaire would give all his gold for his stomach, many a statesman all his popularity for your peace of mind; many a great man all his fame for your conscience."

Leaving the disgrace and humiliation out of sight, many an officer in the army or the navy would be glad to receive the sentence that was passed upon Gen. Eagan. In fact, nine-tenths of the population of the earth would grab at his situation if they could get it, speaking from a financial point of view. While it is true that he is permanently dishonored, and will bear the badge of disgrace the reminder of his life, his financial condition is assured to a degree beyond that of and officer of the army or navy, and it furnishes some striking contrasts. Gen. Eagan will draw from the treasury of the United States during the next six years while he is under suspension a salary of $5,500 a year, without being called upon to perform any duty or bear any responsibility. He will have his entire time to himself. He will be free to engage in business, and will probably go to California, where he has a ranch. He was born on the Pacific coast, where his family still resides, and has spent most of his life there. His pay will be sufficient to support him in comfort and luxury. By the operation of his sentence he loses his allowance for quarters, forage, fuel and other things that are furnished free to army officers by the government, but he will not need them.

Fast Mail to Seattle.

The widespread public interest in the contest of the fast mail contract between Chicago and Omaha caused one to temporarily overlook the similar achievements of the Great Northern railway in establishing quick mail communication from New York, via Chicago and St. Paul, to Seattle, and thence to the Orient. The fast Pacific mail service by way of St. Paul to the Puget Sound country is now quite as remarkable as that via Omaha to San Francisco. On January 3rd the Great Northern placed in service a fast through mail and passenger train from Chicago to Seattle, on which the mail pouches never once leave the car after the transfer at St. Paul.

From New York to Seattle the time by this Northern route is just four days. East of St. Paul the mails are carried on several roads, but west of that city—on a run exceeding the eastern portion by 500 miles—the mail goes through without change across five great states on the tracks of the Great Northern. Forty-five minutes are consumed in transferring the mails in Chicago and thirty minutes in St. Paul. After that the Northern Oriental flyer does the rest without a pause until the Asiatic mails go on board of the steamers of the Japan Mail Steamship Company. Both the importance of Seattle as an Oriental shipping point and the speed of the Great Northern transcontinental mail service make the achievement a noteworthy feature of American railway progress.

The Puget Sound cities have already become formidable rivals of San Francisco as regards the freight and passenger traffic for Japan, China and Asiatic ports. The steamer route from Seattle to the Orient seems to be more free from storms than that from San Francisco, and as a large proportion of the Oriental exports are products of the Northwest the freight traffic has naturally taken this course. The fact that the full capacity of the Japan Mail Steamship Company's boats is engaged as far ahead as next August, is in itself a striking proof of the growing importance of the Oriental trade that has its outlet at Seattle.

For these and other reasons the fast mail to the Pacific coast, for which the Great Northern holds the government contract, is fully as important as that which daily rushes across the plains and mountains to San Francisco. The Great Northern has been as much alive to the keen rivalry for speed and honors as have the Northwestern, Rock Island and Burlington, and it is but fair that the achievements of its fast daily transcontinental mail should be included in the new chapter of railway advancement now being written by the Western railroads.—Chicago Tribune, Jan. 14, 1899.

Matters of Interest.

The bill now before the Legislature to give a state bounty of fifty cents per ton on pig iron manufactured in Minnesota for a period of ten years is attracting considerable attention. It is claimed by the advocates of this bill that it will build up an iron industry here at home second to none in the United States. It is admited by all that a bounty would tend to establish the manufacture of iron, but many are reticent in declaring themselves in favor of the measure until they have heard a full discussion of the question.

Mr. Staples has introduced a bill in the House to build one insane asylum at Hastings and another at Anoka, and the friends of the two cities will exert themselves to secure an institution for each place. A bill providing for county asylums on the Wisconsin plan, with certain modification, is being prepared and will shortly be introduced.

The Lind-O'Brien episode has caused much bad blood in Democratic circles and if all the threats are carried out Lind will find some better opposition when he wants the Fusion renomination two years hence. There is developing a general discontent among the various factions of Fusiondom and if they can be reconsiled to pull together again with any degree of unanimity it will be little less than a miracle. A Democrat does not love a Populist and free-silver Republican with any fervid devotion, neither do Populists and free-silver Republicans love each other nor Democrats. They voted for Lind because they hoped for power or rewards. They have been disappointed and don't intend to be trapped again. Just watch and see if Lind won't have his hands full of political troubles before his term of office expires.

Representative Foss, of Grant county, has been laboring assiduously in the interest of a bill to avoid double taxation on mortgaged property. His plan is to divide the tax in a fixed proportion between the mortgagor and mortgagee. Mortgages owned by non residents will be taxed as will mortgages owned by residents. While the measure is meritorious in theory it is a question whether it can be made practical and operative in our degenerated system of taxation. At all events the legislature will make an honest attempt to perfect this bill but it is probably a hopeless undertaking under present conditions. Much good may, however, come from a thorough consideration of such questions and lead to better laws in the future.

Before Gov. Lind retires from office two years hence he will have made directly or indirectly in the neighborhood of 2,500 appointments. Every one of this army of appointees will be in the trenches ready to fire off their Mauser rifles against the Republican party in the next campaign. Every Republican who voted for Lind and who wishes to vote for protection, honest money and McKinley in 1900 will then learn what a serious mistake he made. The Republican party in this state can never be defeated in a presidential campaign but the opposition it will encounter at the next election is one of the party's own making. Republicans will not commit the error again which they committed in 1898.

St. Peter Tribune: When John Lind chose to make such appointments as Corser, with the hope that a Republican Senate would refuse to confirm, we think the Republicans did just right in refusing to turn Corser down, as Lind would then have had the excuse that he did all he could for his political henchman, and Republicans refused him his choice. The Republican Senate will allow Mr. Lind to be the custodian of his appointments by promptly confirming them.

THE LOCKET MAN.

Babette thrust a hatpin into Marie Antoinette's thinly clad sawdust body. "I'm so lonesome," she said appealingly. But Marie Antoinette's classical china face remained stolidly indifferent. "An we can't have any supper till mademoiselle gets those vests done. We didn't have much for dinner," she added reflectively. Mlle. Cecilia, sewing by the window, smiled bravely at the childish face above the faded brown pinafore. Then she looked at the pile of heavy vests on the chair beside her and sighed:

"Not yet, cherie," she said. "Have patience. We'll have a good supper after I get the money for them—perhaps some sweet crackers, too."

Babette nodded gayly. She closed her door again and went back to her seat on the top stair.

"We mustn't bother mademoiselle when she's so busy, an besides it hurts her to talk," she carefully explained to Marie Antoinette.

Ah! yes! Babette remembered how mademoiselle used to sing in a church and at concerts and earn such a lot of money—till she lost her voice. "An she spent all her money an they didn't make her voice well again, an now there's a big doctor come an she's not got any money to go an get cured." Babette's unchildlike eyes grew big and solemn. "An she don't tell us bout the 'locket man' any more. He's a nice man. When he was a little boy he lived right next door to mademoiselle way off in the country."

Babette grew tired of the stillness and the darkness. She wondered if it was too cold to go out and buy some money for mademoiselle. She opened the door again and looked coaxingly into Mlle. Cecilia's tired eyes.

"We're going up to the corner, me and Marie, to see the birds," she said.

"All right, cherie, run along. Don't go any farther and come back soon."

Out upon the streets boys were playing marbles, their dirty hands blue with the cold, and the first band organ of the season was grinding out a wheezy dance.

After awhile Babette noticed that the afternoon had faded into dusk. Mademoiselle would worry if she didn't go soon.

A big tear splashed down the little dark face and she wiped it away with Marie Antoinette's sprigged calico skirt.

Suddenly some one touched her on the shoulder.

Babette looked up into the brown eyes bent upon her. She noticed the pointed beard and curly hair and a light came into her eyes.

"Why," she said, "it's the locket man!"

The locket man smiled faintly.

"Who's the 'locket man?'" he said.

"Why, it's you—Richard, you know, 'n the locket—in mademoiselle's locket. You're the little boy she used to tell me and Marie 'bout. We're 'dopted, me an Marie."

"What are you begging this way for? Mademoiselle must earn a good deal of money singing," he said harshly.

Babette looked up into his face.

"Oh! but she sews vests now, an we don't have nice things any more, an she cries lots of nights. She's lost her voice, you know."

"Lost her voice—Cecilia?"

Babette nodded wearily.

"An she paid out all her money an they couldn't make her well again, an we come to Poverty flats, an there's a doctor now who'll cure her, only all her money's gone—an I'm so hungry!"

Babette's tired little voice broke. He looked down at her.

"Come," he said, "take me home with you!"

"Yes," he said confidently, "it'll be all right now."

Mlle. Cecilia, sewing by the little window that looked out over blackened roofs and tall chimneys, cried a little to herself that afternoon. She wondered what was going to become of her and Babette.

If she only hadn't Babette! But she had taken the waif in days of prosperity. The little one was such a loyal soul, and besides she was French, and the poorhouse was a lonely place for the orphan. Perhaps it would be better if she had let the child go. There one was sure of something to eat and a place to sleep at least, and she was sure of nothing any more.

She thought of the dear old days when her father was alive, teaching French in the country academy—when Richard Hemingway lived just across the garden. What good times they had together—until her father died. Everything was different after that. She had inherited Legrand pride and independence. She would be no man's portionless bride.

She did not tell Richard that—she knew he would not listen. She had slipped quietly away to the city with her little stock of money, and a friend of her father's had helped her on to success. In the height of her prosperity, after she had taken Babette, she read of Richard's departure for a western state in the interest of a mining concern, and for awhile her heart had failed her. What if he should never come back, or something should happen that he would never know it was for him she was singing and working—for him, and not for fame?

Then she lost her voice, and she knew it was the end of all her dreams. She fought bravely, but little by little her hopes drifted away and her voice did not come back.

The door opened and some one stepped into the room.

She held her work nearer the window. Daylight was giving place to dusk. Shadows lurked in the low ceiled corners. Where could Babette be?

"I'm glad you've come back, cherie," said mademoiselle, not looking up.

"Cecilia, dear heart, don't send me away!"

"Dick, oh, Dick!"

Then she forgot her lost voice, her poverty, her independence, and went into his arms like a child. And from the threshold she heard Babette saying in her happy, tired voice:

"It's the 'locket man'—it's Richard. Are you glad, mademoiselle?"—Baltimore Herald.

A Fatal Weakness.

A new play by a not unknown playwright was read to the company of a London theater by the author, whose spoken language tends to the elision of the aspirate.

"Well," asked a friend of one of the company after the reading, "what did you think of A.'s play?"

"Too long, too long," was the reply: "took three hours to read without the 'h's.'"—London Chronicle.

A Money Saver.

"Beasington is the stingiest man I ever saw. Do you know what he is doing now?"

"No; what's his latest scheme for saving money?"

"He's rented a room over a restaurant, so that he can inhale his meals without extra cost."—Chicago News.

Two Wrestling Matches.

"Nick" Tarrant no longer tells the small boy who buys candy of him what a mighty wrestler he used to be. He was placed upon his back before a large audience in the Athletic club hall Monday evening by K. M. Hansen, and that unostentatious gentleman is now a hero as well as the champion wrestler of Northern Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana. The match was very interesting and the wildest excitement prevaled during the evening. Both were very cautious in the beginning, but Hansen finally out generaled the South Dakota Sioux Indian fighter.

Albert La Bree and Wm. Whitman then spared for a few minutes and then Harry Dobner and James Douglas wrestled, the former being victorious. Sam Bardolson put on the gloves with Chas. Rockstad and the former found that it was not as easy a job as he had anticipated. Rockstad scored several points before time was called. That veteran pugilist and ex-champion of Canada, Joseph De Camp, then gave a shorting boxing exhibition with C. L. Dobner. Joe demonstrated that he was still a good man and had not lost quickness or science.

CARE OF THE COMPLEXION.

How to Treat the Skin to Keep It Fresh and Beautiful.

Never wash the face immediately after exercising in the sun. The action of water on the burned skin increases the inflammation, thus injuring the texture. If water must be used because of soil or where there is no cold cream on hand, have it heated, as cold water on heated skin closes the pores and impedes the circulation, a combination which may result in pimples and blackheads.

The face should be washed regularly before going to bed, to remove the dust and possible germs that may have accumulated during the day. Use pure olive oil soap, warm water and a Turkish toweling washcloth. Rub the skin briskly, rinse with soapless water, dry and massage two or three minutes with cold cream that is absolutely pure.

Women with sensitive skins should never wash the face just before going out in the sun, as it renders the skin more liable to tan and sunburn.

If the skin chaps readily, rub the face lightly with the least particle of cold cream before going out in the wind. To prevent a greasy appearance, powder slightly with talcum powder.

It is exceedingly bad taste to go about with an oily skin, which renders the nose and forehead conspicuous and shiny. An oily skin should be bathed at night in hot water and dusted several times a day with talcum powder. The idea that it is "wicked" to use a harmless powder on the face is the veriest nonsense. It is exceedingly bad form not to use it if the skin is oily, for a greasy nose is almost as repulsive as a deformity.

Pure talcum powder does not injure the skin. On the contrary, it is distinctly beneficial. It does not remain on the face and serve as a cosmetic, but merely absorbs the moisture and drops off, leaving the complexion clear, wholesome and attractive.

A promiscuous use of ordinary cosmetic powders is much to be deprecated. They almost invariably contain white lead, which is very injurious to the skin. They do not absorb moisture, but remain on the skin and clog the pores.

If talcum powder cannot be obtained, ordinary shaving magnesia will answer the purpose, as it is equally harmless and does not adhere to the skin.

A beautiful skin depends largely upon proper digestion; hence the woman who is studying to preserve or to improve her complexion will make a point of keeping her stomach, bowels and liver in fine working order.—Demorest's Magazine.

How to Sweeten Rancid Butter.

Thoroughly wash the butter first with good new milk and next with cold spring water. Butyric acid, on the presence of which rancidity depends, is freely soluble in fresh milk. After washing press the butter with the hands until the water and milk are removed, then lightly squeeze the lump of butter in a towel, put into shape until all liquid is removed and keep in a cool place until used.

How to Clean Brass Trays.

Brass trays are kept in order by simply washing them in boiling hot soda soapsuds and then lathering them well, a little soap being used if they are very dirty. One way of cleaning them is to sift fine brick dust till it is a very fine powder. Take up a good portion of this on half a lemon (previously used in lemonade or sherbet making) and rub the tray well over with this, carefully going over any stains till removed; and then rinsing and letting it dry. Treated in this manner, trays keep clean and an admirable color for a long time. Metal polish and such things spoil the color, giving it a yellow tinge quite different from the golden brass it looks when cleaned with lemon juice and fine brick dust.

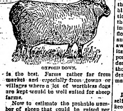
SHEEP AS A SPECIALTY.

Strong Points of Different Breeds, Crops and Pasture.

In a paper recently read before the Granville (O.) institute C. C. Shaw discussed sheep as a specialty. In this county, said he, there are perhaps few if any farms devoted entirely to sheep, and it is a question open to diversity of opinion as to how many sheep a farm will carry or produce per acre. Those who have not had experience will differ widely on this point. Some have an idea, although I think an erroneous one, that sheep above all other animals are particularly hard on pasture. It is true they will do well on pasture too short for cattle to thrive on, and if run together they would be hard on cattle. On the contrary, pasture grazed close by sheep is something like cropping a hedge. It will thicken up in the bottom and rather improve than otherwise, and while sheep will do better than other stock on short pasture, in growthy seasons they can be fed on long pasture with less waste than if horses or cattle were fed on it. Their small feet do less damage in tramping, and anything left can be made into good clean hay. The number of sheep that could be kept or produced would depend on the kind or breed. No doubt some kinds consume very much more food than others.

A sheep farm need not necessarily be an expensive one. A rather heavy soil is the best. Farms rather far from market and especially from towns or villages where a lot of worthless dogs are kept would be well suited for sheep farms.



OXFORD DOWN.

Now to estimate the probable number of sheep that could be raised per acre, I think that about two would be a fair estimate, which should make an average of from $5 to $6 per head. If they were Merinos, more could be raised, and if some of the larger, coarser kinds perhaps less.

The Down sheep have advantages that are too often overlooked. Owing to the fact that the fleece is more compact and smooth on the surface they never wet to the skin by being exposed to rain or snow. The lambs when dropped are smarter and better able to help themselves. Being rather smaller and naturally more lively, they are better adapted to come through a dry season in good shape. However, just here it is better to provide some kind of soiling crop and not allow the flock to shrink for want of sufficient food.

There are some who will hardly believe that two sheep can be raised annually on an acre of land, but with the experience I have had with sheep I believe it is quite within the range of possibility, and the farm will improve from year to year. To do this, say on a farm of 100 acres, there should be about 70 acres in grass, ten of which might be in rye. This would afford two weeks of early pasture, allowing the other pastures to get a good start before turning on them.

The Future of Beef.

An anonymous correspondent of an exchange takes a very gloomy view of the beef business from the standpoint of the consumer. According to his figures, the shortage of good beef cattle this year will be from 500,000 to 700,000 head, and out of this and the indications for the future he deduces the statement that "cheap meat is a thing of the past." It is true that the consumer in centers of population is just now paying more for his beef than he has been paying for some time, and conditions point to the probability that he will have to continue to do so. But no such dismal outlook confronts the people as this prophet would have us believe. The population of the United States has a number of times gone through a period when cattle were selling much higher than now and when meats were costing the people much greater figures, and still we didn't starve, nor did we meet with anything special in the nature of disaster.—National Stockman.

Feeding Turnips on the Land.

We could never understand how English farmers made it pay to huddle sheep on potato patches and keep them there until the turnips were consumed. All our American sheep would waste more than they used, unless indeed the turnips were only fed off while the soil was dry or the turnips were frozen into the ground. The only advantage of the plan seems to have been that the sheep manure was evenly distributed while the sheep were feeding, and as the sheep were also fed grain the land was enriched for future crops. But the turnips surely did not make much as mutton as they should have done.—Boston Cultivator.

SHELTER FOR SHEEP.

Sheds Must Be Ventilated and Everything Kept Dry.

John A. Craig of the Iowa experiment station, writing in The Breeder's Gazette, says: Sheep that are well wooled will keep thrifty under the hardest climatic conditions if they are given such shelter as will keep them dry and also protect them from the wind. It is a good practice in northern latitudes to put a foot or so of good straw in the yards where the sheep are to spend most of the winter just before the first fall of snow. This, with the liberal use of straw later, will materially assist in keeping the yards dry. In the sheds straw used freely will also provide for this if a dry site for the sheds has been chosen.

A warm, close building inclined to become damp is the most fertile cause of snuffles, or common cold, in my estimation. Sheep catch cold in their heads from the same causes as we do, and it is a common experience that the change from a warm, damp atmosphere to one cold and dry will be very effective in causing it. Open sheds dry underfoot are much more healthy for sheep than more costly buildings that become warm and damp. In northern Wisconsin, where the climate is cold and dry in the winter, sheep sheltered in open sheds rarely run at the nose. When I say open sheds I mean just what that term expresses, for our sheds are only of one layer of inch lumber, and fully one-third of the front facing south and east is never closed. The bed for the sheep is always dry, and it is remarkable how few among the sheep, though some of them are 10 years old, show the least sign of colds. I am inclined to believe that much of the snuffling credited to the presence of the larvæ of the gadfly is nothing but common cold, due to dampness underfoot or quarters that are too warm. A well capped Shropshire chewing its cud and lying in a dry bed of clean straw is an attractive picture of contentment, even though the thermometer may be a score of degrees below zero.

Protection from the wind is just as necessary as shelter from rain and snow. Sheep are very susceptible to eye troubles brought on by exposure to a driving wind. Very often such exposure will result in the growth of a film over the eye, which results in temporary blindness. Careful feeding and attention, with due shelter, generally bring them through it all right. I have known instances where all the members of the flock would lose their sense of seeing and bring despair to the flockmaster unaware of the cause of the trouble and its temporary nature. It is a grand opportunity for the quack to afford evidence of his unusual skill by bleeding the sheep when they of themselves under good care would regain their normal sight.

Feeding Grain.

I suppose every man settles for himself the quantity of grain necessary to keep his cattle in good condition, and, in fact, the amount differs in various parts of the country. Where one can use a good deal of oilmeal and flaxseed oil cake in feeding, the amount of corn, oats or other whole grains required is very small. There are large oil mills in some counties where oilmeal cakes can be purchased at very low prices. A little of this food mixed with a diet of hay, corn, fodder and ensilage makes a pretty complete ration for cattle without any grains. In fact, cattle can be kept on such a ration in good condition all through the winter. Oilmeal always comes in to give variety to the food, even if it is not depended on for the nutriment furnished.

But, after all, a small quantity of corn, bran, oats or other grains given each day to the cattle and swine will produce results which will compensate for their cost. They add muscle, strength, bone and fat to the animals that make them stand the rigors of our climate with ease, and when spring comes they are in excellent condition for pasturing. In giving grain, however, it is always better to give it in connection with hay, grass or fodder. The grain fed in this way produces better digestive effects than when fed alone. When oats are given to cattle or horses alone, they will eat them so rapidly that quite a percentage will pass through them without being digested. Mixed with cut and moistened hay or fodder, the animals will eat slower, and they will get more good from the grain.—E. P. Smith in Boston Cultivator.

Succulent Feed For Hogs.

The hog's stomach is very small in proportion to the body which it has to digest nutriment for. Hence we have never favored feeding hogs mainly on bulky food with little nutrition. All the attempts to grow hogs on clover without grain, even when they appear successful for a time, tend to degenerate the hog to his original wild condition, when it was lank, long bodied and had comparatively little pork for its weight. Yet where hogs are being fattened they should have some bulky food in addition to their grain, and it ought always to be succulent so as to mix well with the grain in digesting. Wheat fine middlings with milk or water will be eaten greedily by animals fed on corn, and if to this a few raw beets are given daily it will keep the hog thrifty and its pork will be much sweeter and better than that made by feeding corn alone.—Boston Cultivator.

Heaves In Horses.

There is no permanent cure for heaves in horses. It can be lessened in extent by feeding nutritive material in small bulk and more frequent rations. All coarse feed should be avoided, such as timothy, millet and clover hay. The best wild hay is preferable and it should be cut fine and given in small quantities mixed with mill feed or steamed food. Feed everything wet. Feed and water should be consumed at [illegible] hour before the animal is used for work.—Live Stock.

OVER THE FERRY.

It was a beautiful frosty morning in December. A lady wearing a pink complexion and a green riding habit was in her saddle. Captain Miller rode beside her. They were hurrying to catch the 11:15 from Haybridge for Aldershot.

"We have only one chance," he cried. "Shepperton ferry! We have only 20 minutes."

"Then we shan't do it!" she exclaimed almost fiercely, raising herself in her saddle. "There is the ferry!"

Captain Miller leaped from his saddle and taking the horses' heads led them on to the great unwieldy ferryboat as a butcher's cart came off it.

"Quick over!" he shouted to the ferryman. "We want to catch the 11:15 from Haybridge."

"What's the time now, sir?"

"Nearly 11."

The ferryman looked across the river. "Lor', sir, you're about as likely to catch that train as I am to become the champion sculler next regatta."

The lady produced her smile and a green purse lined with red leather and white satin. Out of this came half a sovereign, which she slipped into the ferryman's receptive fingers.

"These are a bit uncommon, lady," said the ferryman, slipping the gold into his pocket. "Bill, wake up at your end. We've got to make this 'ere old boat move along."

And they did too.

The horses tossed their heads in the air and rolled their eyes, nervously champing their bits and shaking their bridles. Captain Miller, holding both reins in one hand, looked again at his watch.

"Shall we do it?" she asked anxiously.

He did not answer in words, but the expression on his face plainly said "No."

"Bet you we shall!" cried the lady brightly.

"What will you bet?"

Her voice dropped to a low tone as she answered, but low though her voice was she spoke with the utmost intensity.

"What will I bet? My hand and my heart and my life."

"If that be the stake," said Captain Miller, "we'll catch the train."

"If we don't, I'll never speak to you again," she said, looking at the jeweled watch upon her wrist. "Help me up."

He bent down, and treading on his palm she jumped lightly into her saddle. The ferryboat grated on the shore. They touched their horses on the flanks and were off.

* * * * * * * *

The December days went by, the crisp winter weather passed, and there came the lovely May time. Again the old ferryboat crossed the river to bring over a carriage with a pair of bays.

The carriage was empty except for the two servants who were on the box. When it was ferried over, the coachman took up his reins, and threading his way through the old boats and punts which lay along the side of the ferry road he drove off.

"D'ye know whose carriage that was, Mr. Wheal?" said one the ferryman to the other.

"That's Captain Miller's carriage, him that lives up at Littleton, the house what has a clock. He got married last week. Speck he'll come down 'ere this summer."

"Had any more thick uns lately, Mr Wheal?"

"No, Bill, I ain't. They're not over plentiful. She was one of the right sort, she was. I wonder if she caught that train? Did ye hear wot her bet was?"

"No."

"Well, she bet her 'art and 'er 'and."

"Lor'!"

"Gentle folks 'as funny ways, Bill," said the ferryman reflectively.

* * * * * * * *

The spring went and the summer came. One of our English summers it happened to be, with cold winds and gray skies. Wheal was sculling over in the small ferryboat, as his custom was. He came from the Haybridge side with two passengers as his freight.

They were ladies. Stepping out of the boat on the Shepperton side, they accosted another, who was waiting to be ferried over.

"Good morning, Mrs. Miller," they said, nodding and smiling hurriedly from their umbrellas. Then they passed on under the poplars.

Wheal looked up quickly from his boat, identifying Mrs. Miller in his mind's eye.

The lady got in and sat down, huddling herself under a small fur cape.

When the ferryman had brought his boat to the steps, the lady, producing her green purse, opened it. It was lined with red morocco and white satin. The ferryman, smiling with agreeable recollections, was emboldened to speak.

"You caught that train, lady, last December?"

"Yes," she said curtly. Then she paid him his penny.

"Bill," said the ferryman to his mate as he stood afterward in the shed watching the beautiful rain, "you know that lady that we ferried over in the winter—her with Captain Miller and the 'orses?"

"Her that wanted to ketch a train?"

"That's her. Well, she did ketch her train, an she ketched him, too, an he ketched her, and, in my opinion, he's ketched a Tartar."

"How d'ye know all that, Mr. Wheal?"

"How do I know it? Why, she's Mrs. Miller now, cos that's what I heard them two ladies a-callin 'er. An the stake was 'er 'art an 'er 'and—if she ketched the train. If, mind yer—if. Well, she's Mrs Miller, an so she did ketch it; an somehow I think now she would rather she'd lorst it."

"Why do you think that, Mr. Wheal?"

"Why! Well, she had a pretty smile in the winter time, and her face was a pretty pink—a lovely pink it was, but it's 'er nose as is pink now. Then she give us 'alf a golden jommy. Well, this is what she give me now."

On Wheal's broad, toil worn palm lay a penny. He held it out and looked at it with varying expressions, scorn and reproach and disgust. Then he looked at it once more and again held it out at arm's length, with an expression now of sorrow.

"There! That's wot she give me. Lor, now! I ask you, Bill, is marriage a failure?"

"It allus is," said Bill, buttoning up his coat and retreating into the shed.

But Bill was a misanthrope whenever it was wet in summer time. It had grown colder, the drizzle had changed to sleet, and now it was beginning to hail.—Lloyd's News.

Making It Right.

"Madam," said the leader of the Best Citizens' league, "I have come to inform you that we have just lynched your husband by mistake."

The bereaved woman covered her face with her hands and began to moan.

"There, there!" the best citizen went on. "Don't cry. It'll come out all right yet. We expect to get the right man before night."—Chicago News.

S. W. Ellis sues the Red Lake Falls Lumber Company for wages as scaler, on agreement with J. E. Potts. The judge has the case under advisement.

The case of Hanchett vs. Boughton was tried before a jury. This was an action for the recovery of $35.10 and interest, amounting in all to about $70.00. Defendant claimed that other parties than himself were liable, but offered to pay $20.00. The jury brought in a verdict for plaintiff for $40.00.

Johnson vs. Pope suit on note, settled.

Deering Harvester Co. vs. H. Fant & Co. Moved on the calendar. Motion for continuance.

The demurres to the indictment against Van R. Brown was brought up for re-argument. The court sustained the demurrer, but ordered the case to be re-submitted to next grand jury. Mr. Brown also appealed from the action of the county commissioners in fixing his salary at $450 per year and the matter has been taken under advisement by Judge Watts.

George Hensel, indicted by the last grand jury for burning his saloon in Thief River Falls to obtain the insurance was dismissed and set free on motion of the county attorney.

Motion for new trial was argued in the case of P. & J. Meehan vs. Zeh and was taken under advisement.

Eddy Used "Skees."

The Washington Post of yesterday has the following discription of our Congressman during the snow storm: Congressman Eddy of Minnesota owns a pair of snowshoes, or as they call them out in his country "skees." During the blizzard Mr. Eddy took down the snowshoes from the wall, where they do duty as an unique decoration, and fastened them on his feet. Then he sailed forth from his home on Columbia Hights and was at once the admiration and envy of all the inhabitants of that section. While the rubbered and booted and leggined population was struggling down Fourteenth street, seeking the railway track that offered the path of least resistance, Mr. Eddy was skimming along over the drifts and down into the valleys like a bird in the air. His tall gaunt figure was outlined against the sky, but the snowshoes gave him poetry of motion. Occasionally he would lume up at the top of a drift ten or fifteen feet in the air and then he would sink down out of sight, between two great hillocks of snow. He went with great speed too, and had reached Thomas circle by the time the weary walkers were at U street.

Fell Among Thieves.

According to Louis Sieff, a Red Lake Falls business man, Chicago police judges and the police of the Windy City are "next" to each other, and both very close to the criminal element. He was recently held up in broad daylight in one of the streets of that city, by three women, one of the female big mits going through his pockets for $60 cash, while the others held his arms. He pulled a gun, fired in the air, and one of the women was frightened into yielding to arrest. The policeman who appeared was shown the other two who were just disappearing into a building, but refused to go after them, and advised Sieff to hire a petective. The captive was arranged and held for examination, and Sieff was then placed under arrest for carrying a gun. He is a Hebrew, and so fortunately for him was the justice, who released him on his own recognizance. He decided that the arrest for the gun play and his release was a part of the scheme to prevent him from appearing against the women, and he left the city promptly, and firm in the belief that his $60 was divided with the policeman.—Crookston Times.

A NEW BOAT

And Another One to Be Rebuilt This Spring.

Capt. C. H. Bulse returned to this city from Minneapolis last week. He is now making arrangements for the building of a steamboat which will ply between this city and the Upper Red Lake during the coming season. It will be 90 feet in length, and will have side wheels. Mr. Bulse will also build a hotel upon his claim at the mouth of Shotley brook and will make a specialty of caring for the wants of sporting men who will visit him during the summer months.

One of P. & J. Meehan's steamboats, the "Llewelyn," is being repaired and an addition of 20 feet is being built upon the bow. This will make it as large as the "Alice" and it will be one of the best boats on the river during the coming season.

The "white man's burden" in Red Lake county is growing heavier day by day. For further particulars see the tax list.

If Congressman Eddy is nominated for governor two years hence, there will be lively scramble for his congressional shoes.

It is stated upon good authority that Admiral Dewey favors a central government of the Philippines by the United States, but all local government of the islands to be absolutely in the hands of the Filipinos.

Roseau county has about given up hopes of securing a railroad and the citizens up there take comfort in reading the following from the Roseau Times: "Better countries than this have waited 20 years or more for a railroad and most of the old settlers will tell you that the best times they ever enjoyed was when they had no railroad."

The thirty-third annual meeting of the Minnesota Editors' and Publishers' association held at St. Paul last Thursday and Friday was a very enjoyable affair and much credit is due to the Jobbers' Union, the Commercial Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association and the Elks for the entertaining programme furnished.

The plan of the Democrats and Populists of North Carolina to maintain a government without the consent of the governed culminated last week when an amendment to the constitution was adopted by both branches of the general assembly with the avowed object of disfranchising the negroes of that state. Educational property and poll-tax qualifications are prescribed, and in order that they may not apply to the poor white class, citizens whose ancestors voted prior to the first of January, 1867, are exempt.

NEWS NOTES CRIBBED FROM OUR EXCHANGES.

Wolf farming is quite profitable in some sections of Red Lake county. Tuesday August Peterson, of Bray, brought in one batch of six wolves, receiving from the county auditor a warrant of $30.00 therefore. Chas Clark, of Rocksbury brought in four. Since January first 58 have been presented to Auditor Zeh. The bounty is $5 during the months of January, February, March and April, and $3 the balance of the year.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Ole R. Backke, a Red Lake reservation settler who left his farm last July to work in North Dakota during harvest and threshing, has not been heard from since. He had some money and foul play is suspected. Informations relating to his whereabouts at any time since his departure will be appreciated by his brother, John J. Backke, Windsor P. O., Beltrami county, Minn.

Last Friday a cow belonging to the herd of Hon. E. E. Pratt, of Bethel, gave birth to quintuplets, the bovine family being increased by three daughters and two sons, all being alive, well formed and healthy. One weighed 30 pounds, another 28 and the others 24 each. Their owner has named them Lady McKinley, Helen Gould, Clara Barton, Sampson and Dewey. The mother cow has heretofore performed several unusual feats in stock raising in years gone by, having dropped 10 calves in four years, but last Friday's feat is her greatest, and we believe, a record for the world.—Anoka Herald.

Girls, here's a chance. An Oregon girl ties a piece of sandpaper about her ankles, which produces the same effect as buying and expensive silk skirt. The sandpaper rubs together and sounds just like a $50 silk skirt; it has the swish and rustle, and what more do you want?

In writing up a cyclone, a western editor says, "it turned a well inside out, a cellar upside down, moved the township line, blew all the staves out of a whiskey barrel and left nothing but a bunghole, changed the day of the week, blew the cracks out of a fence and took all the wind out of a politician." I believe everything except the last statement. Nothing could take the wind out of a politician—except death.

Milton A. Converse, of McIntosh, has accepted a position as tinsmith with Frank E. Hunt. Mr. Converse was formerly in the employ of Hunt & Wyer at Thief River Falls in a like capacity.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

A colony of Norwegian Lutherans of De Smet, S. D., have taken a novel way to raise money enough to build a church. For some years each member of the colony gave the proceeds of one acre of land, for this purpose, and now they have accumulated enough to enable them to build, free from debt.

The fact that advertisements are read is illustrated in the sad case of a soldier who furnished a testimonial for publication the other day to the effect that he had been restored to perfect health by a certain brand of pills. He had been drawing a pension of $20 a month and the pension ceased shortly after the testimonial appeared. The pension department opined that a man who had been completely cured was not entitled to aid from Uncle Sam.

Red Lake Falls wants to put in water works, but finds it will have to have the laws changed. The council estimates that $15,000 is about the amount needed for the proposed water works. Under the statute the amount of bonds allowable are ten per cent. of the assessed valuation, and this restricts a new issue to $5,000. A bill will be introduced changing the percentage from ten to fifteen, and upon the disposition of this depends the kind and extent of water works to be put in.

For the first time in the history of Fosston, a liquor license was revoked by the village council on Wednesday, that of Olia Olson. The trouble arose over an injury received to the right eye some weeks ago by one Lillimoen, a vagrant character commonly known as "McGinty" who has been on the village charity since then.—Thirteen Towns.

The Crookston people are working for the repeal of the township poor law, which is operative in Polk county. It is claimed by the friends of repeal that altogether too many dependents belonging to other townships in Polk county are saddled onto Crookston under the present arrangement.

The state fish and game commission is opposed to the McCarthy bill declaring that the hides and horns of deer, moose, etc., shall be the absolute property of the man who kills them legally. They say that the right to seize these pelts is the backbone of the law against the killing of deer out of season. Before this was passed deer were slaughtered by the score in the northern part of the state and their carcasses left to rot, while the Indians and others who slaughtered the animals sold the hides. The commission wants the right to seize these hides wherever and whenever they may be found. Executive Agent Fullerton says the present law has reduced the slaughter of deer 50 per cent. The game committee has laid the bill aside for amendment.

The masked ball given by the St. Hilaire ladies last week must have been a success. The Spectator says that "Harry Ives came home decorated with souvenirs, a blood red heart pinned on his coat sleeve and for the first time in his life a blue ribbon tied in a button hole of his coat. His associates looked surprised."

The farmers around Princeton have for the past few years devoted considerable of their time to the raising of potatoes, and appear to have been highly successful. Princeton is now regarded by outside buyers as one of the best potato markets in the state, and the farmers annually receive a large sum from this source. The Union of that city publishes the statement last week that over $200,000 has been paid to the farmers living within a radius of twenty miles of Princeton for potatoes this season. The average price paid by the buyers was 21 cents a bushel, and for the culls the farmers received 15 cents per bushel at the starch factory. This is an excellent showing, and the farmers of other sections might emulate this example with profit. As the Union remarks: "This is one reason why this section is developing so rapidly; why our farmers have money to pay off their mortgages, and why some of them are able to loan money to their less fortunate neighbors."

The village of Mesaba, the oldest settlement in the Mesaba range, is passing away and nothing will soon be left of it but a memory. The village election comes in March but none will be held as there is only about a dozen families left to occupy the hundred old buildings there. The deserted village leaves behind a debt of about $103, with no assets.

Fred Rippan, who succeeded Agent Freeman at St. Hilaire, has been found to be short in his accounts, and was discharged by the Great Northern last week. C. A. Brummund is now agent at that point.

Dr. Watson, of Red Lake Falls, took out his second citizenship papers before Judge Watts last week and he is now being boomed for mayor of Red Lake Falls. He would make a good one.

It would seem as if there was a good opening for a physician in Roseau county, or else the advantages of that portion of the country as a health resort have been underestimated. The county has a population of 5,000, but the judge of probate found it necessary to send an insane patient to Crookston for examination, there being no doctor there.

The Shevlin-Carpenter Lumber company is going to establish twenty or thirty retail lumber yards in Northern Minnesota and Dakota towns. They hope to secure a better price for their lumber in this way.

The new woolen mills at Fosston have got fairly started to work and two looms are busy already attending to the business that has been coming in steadily for several weeks. Traveling representatives will be sent out as soon as possible to solicit patronage for the business and the opening outlook is indeed bright.

There will probably be considerable lumber rafted down the Red Lake river to this city next summer. There are several saw mills located at different points upon the Red Lake and the Crookston Times say that a new company that will build and operate the saw mill on O'Brien Creek, near Black Duck, and that all arrangements have been made, and the mill will be ready to begin sawing by the middle of March, although it is not likely that the wheels will be turned until the spring break-up comes. The summer's work will be that of sawing the logs now in the stream, which belong to Elias Steenerson,—about a half million feet. There is in the neighborhood of ten millions that are tributary to the mill. The owners are Messrs. Poupore, Roddy and Corless, of East Grand Forks.

Thief River Falls' horse trader C. C. Carlson has sent reports out here, that he and his wife will come through here this week in their caboose on a journey to Crookston, and the women around here have already built a fire in their stoves, and set the coffee pots on for boiling, in order to serve them with a good cup of coffee when they do come. Mr. Carlson was one of the first settlers in Bray, and is known by many from 18 to 20 years back, but moved to Thief River Falls some years ago for better business. Oscar W. Erickson from Bray will attend to business for Carlson while he is absent.—Bray correspondence in Crookston Times.

Last week the final transfer was made of the plant, business and good will of the Crookston Brewing company to a corporation known as the J. Kiewel Brewing company. The new proprietors are Messrs. John and Charles Kiewel, of Little Falls and the amount involved in the sale is $20,000. The new proprietors will add to the capacity of the plant, will build a new brew house and in other ways improve the property in the early summer. The services of an expert brewer have been secured and the company will make the property one of the leading brewery plants in the state.

THE DAINTY MUSHROOM.

How to Prepare This Nutritious Delicacy in Various Ways.

Broiled Mushrooms.—Peel the mushrooms, taking care not to break them, and cut off the stalks. Heat the broiler, lay on the mushrooms and broil the upper side first; then turn and expose the other side. They should be tender in eight or ten minutes. Remove from the fire, baste with melted butter, season with salt and pepper and serve on toast. The addition of slices of lemon is optional.

Puree of Mushrooms.—Cut in pieces a quart of mushrooms and put them to soak in cold water in which the juice of a lemon has been squeezed. Let them stand half an hour; drain and put them in a saucepan with a tablespoonful of butter. Simmer until tender, add the juice of a lemon, pepper and salt to taste and stir until thick. Strain and serve.

Baked Mushrooms.—Prepare the vegetables, as usual, by peeling them and removing the stems. Grease the baking dish with butter and carefully place in it the mushrooms, with the upper side down. Bake in a quick oven for 15 minutes, basting twice with melted butter. When done, season with salt and pepper, pour over the butter in the dish and serve.

Stewed Mushrooms.—Peel the mushrooms, wash them in cold water and scrape the stems, cutting off the hard ends. Place in a saucepan a tablespoonful of butter and when melted add half the quantity of flour. Put in a pint of mushrooms, cover the pan and let them simmer gently for ten minutes, stirring often. Add two tablespoonfuls of cream, heat up again, season with salt and pepper and serve.

Fried Mushrooms.—Prepare large, firm mushrooms as for broiling; then roll them in cracker meal, dip them in beaten egg, then in cracker meal again. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and fry in butter. Garnish with slices of lemon.

Creamed Mushrooms.—Peel large, fresh mushrooms, sprinkle them with salt and pepper and put them in a saucepan with a little water. For each quart of mushrooms add a tablespoonful of butter and let them simmer for ten minutes. Pour in a pint of cream in which has been mixed a tablespoonful of cornstarch, stir two or three minutes and serve.

Stuffed Mushrooms.—Cut up the stalks of the mushrooms, with one-fourth their quantity of white onions and parsley. Squeeze dry in a cloth, put in a saucepan with a little butter and brown gravy and set them over the fire for five minutes. Have large, firm mushrooms in waiting, fill them with the mixture and lay them on a buttered dish. Sprinkle them with sifted bread crumbs, bake for ten minutes and serve.

How to Make Soap Bark.

The soap bark, which is invaluable for removing spots from men's and boys' clothes, is made as follows: Pour upon 5 cents' worth (one ounce) of soap bark—to be bought at any druggist's—a pint of boiling water, let it stand overnight, strain through a fine sieve, add a gill of alcohol and it is ready for use and will keep any length of time.

How to Make Beef Shortcake.

This may be made of cold, but fresh beef has a finer flavor. One pound of good, tender rump steak, cut in half inch slices and then in inch squares. Pour boiling water over these, add salt and pepper, cover closely after being skimmed and simmer until very tender. Let the liquor stew nearly away and dredge a little flour over, add a teaspoonful of butter. Make a rich biscuit dough and bake in two layers, spreading butter on the under one. When baked, separate and cover with the hot meat slices, and also a layer on top. The size of the shortcake may be determined by the quantity of meat.—Chicago Herald.

Our Telephone Line.

The line will also be extended to Winnipeg Junction from this city and a direct connection made in that manner with the Twin Cities.

A special to the Pioneer Press from Washington says:

"The river and harbor bill reported from the committee on commerce of the senate contains several modifications of the measure as it passed the house, and among the changes for Minnesota is an increase of $5,000 in the appropriations for Red lake and Red Lake river, giving a total of 25,000 for the improvements on that lake and stream."

KARL TO HARRY

Tells Him to Go Get a Reputation.

H. G. Dobner wishes to wrestle with K. M. Hansen and accordingly he has issued the following challenge, which was placed in the hands of the News Tuesday:

K. M. Hansen, Thief River Falls, Minn. Dear Sir: As you are claiming the title of champion wrestler of Northern Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana, and also the Sioux Indian reservation, I hereby challenge you to a catch-as-catch-can wrestling match, best two out of three falls, three points down, no holts barred. Said match to be before the club offering the biggest purse, the Thief River Falls Athletic club preferred. I am willing to back this up with any sum of money you may designate. I have heard enough of your bluffing—show your colors or get down off the perch. H. G. Dobner.

Mr. Hansen was shown the above and gave the News the following written statement which he says defines his position:

H. G. Dobner, Thief River Falls, Minn., Dear Sir: I must refuse your challenge until you emerge from the juvenile class by first meeting and conquering the famous ex-champion of the Sioux nation, Mr. Nicodemus Goliath Tarrant, whose ambitious pretentions were so suddenly checked in the first fall in last week's match, and in which he threw up the sponge rather than face a second round.

K. M. Hansen,
Champion Wrestler of Northern Minnesota, the Dakotas, Montana and the Sioux Indian Reservation.

A well-known local sport claims that "Nick" Tarrant was doped last Monday and gives that as the reason for his failure to throw Hansen. "Everyone knows," he said, "that 'Nick' was a favorite, the betting in some instances being two to one. Just before the match came off, Tarrant drank a quart of blood, a practice which he has kept up ever since he entered the ring. The blood was furnished by a local butcher, who bet large sums of money on Hansen, and I believe it contained a dope." There has been considerable talk of this nature floating about town, but Mr. Tarrant does not himself say he was doped, although he intimates that there was something wrong. He also claims that several parties tried to buy him up the afternoon before the mill, and that lends color to the story that he was doped.

The Swiss Parliament.

Switzerland differs from other countries in many things, and one of the most remarkable is the way in which its parliamentary debates are conducted. A Swiss member of parliament can express himself in French, German or Italian, and the privilege is freely used. When the president of the federal assembly speaks in German, his remarks are translated by a secretary in close proximity to him. All the laws and resolutions, before being voted upon, are drawn up in French, German and Italian, and every official report is published in these three languages.—Birmingham Post.

Making It Clear.

Somebody has discovered that a Bermuda onion eaten raw will clear the head. A Bermuda onion eaten raw will do more than that. It will clear an entire room. An active Bermuda onion is a complete clearing house all by itself. Take one Bermuda onion—only one—and let the lips of beauty close upon it, and love will turn to hatred and honey to gall and bitterness.

Clear the head? Why, a Bermuda onion in fair good health will clear the head of navigation!—Exchange.

WHY BREED SCRUB HOGS?

An Expert Considers It a Privilege to Raise Swine.

The feed and treatment of sows, writes A. N. Springer in Land and A Living, have much to do with the extent of their profitable period. At no time should they have an all corn ration, but it should be supplemented by milk, bran, slop, grass, etc. Corn is the worst feed to give a sow—that is, for a main article of feed—but often it is the only thing they get. A sow fed through the winter on corn alone, or with mayhap a bucket of slop occasionally, is not in fit condition for farrowing healthily. Her system is apt to be feverish and the unnatural craving will very likely lead to her devouring her pigs. The pigs, too, are very apt to be a sorry looking lot, and if they live will never give the owner much pleasure, pride or profit. The remedy is to feed plenty of nitrogenous foods. A rye patch makes excellent green pasture for hogs in winter. Lacking this and other grass or root crops, then feed plenty of bran and shorts in slop. A liberal variety is the key to success.

MODEL POLAND-CHINA.

Shotes, too, up to within a month or two of selling time should have a good variety of feed. The last two months the corn should predominate. But it will always pay to give a little variety by way of condiment.

The best time to sell hogs is when they are fat, regardless of prices. Some are even now selling half fatted stuff. Ask them why and they say. "The corn is worth more than the hogs." To sell a half fatted hog is not business unless there is a weightier reason than that of price to be considered.

Good shelter for all hogs at this time of year is an imperative necessity. A bunch of hogs sleeping in the farm corner and squealing as only a cold pig can squeal does not make pleasant music to one who likes to feel that his stock is warm and well fed. Especially are dry, warm quarters desirable for a sow and pigs. A cold pig is a dissatisfied pig, and a dissatisfied pig will not eat as it should.

A thoroughbred or a good grade of hogs should always be kept. The thoroughbreds are the most profitable, and they are so low that it looks like a piece of foolishness to do without them. If you are skeptical, get a thoroughbred male and cross on your "elm peelers" and see if you do not have the best bunch of pigs you ever owned. A little better than scrub care must be awarded them. Our motto should be "the best," for indeed the best is none too good for one who lives up to his privileges as a swine breeder. Mind, I say "lives up to his privileges," for it is a privilege to raise hogs as fine as the finest and as good as the best!

There are four great breeds of swine, with some others of lesser fame, but perhaps just as good in their sphere. The Poland-Chinas by mere force of numbers, if for no other reason, come first, with perhaps the Berkshires holding second place. The third in the list of honor is the far famed Chester White. And last, but not least (at least in size), are the Duroc-Jerseys. With such a list of notables to choose from, why breed scrubs?

Sheep In the South.

A writer in The American Sheep Breeder says southern farmers are spending millions of dollars for fertilizers every year. A bulletin published by the United States agricultural department recently shows that a large proportion of these fertilizers gives no profit and in many cases the money is not recovered, but is a total loss. But there never was an instance yet known of any loss or indeed of the absence of a good profit to any southern farmer in the keeping of a flock of sheep on his idle lands turned out as old friends to wash and become gullied and wasted while lying idle, bare and burning under the sun. Idle land is always wasting, just as the idle time of a man is a waste and a loss. It is gaining nothing by the exposure to the sun and weather, and what little of it is covered with weedy growth gets no benefit. The common practice, too, of burning the sedge grass on it is still more destructive, for it consumes the little vegetable matter that may have been collected in the previous year, and leaves the bare, scorched ground poorer than it was when cultivation was abandoned some years before.

Range Feeding.

The tendency of ranchmen to feed their own lambs and wethers at home on the produce of irrigated farms sheds a new light on the feeding situation. So strong, indeed, is the present tendency in this direction that within two or three years the bulk of the male lamb crop will be fed where raised, and eastern feeders will be compelled to look elsewhere for the millions of lambs they are accustomed to feed annually east of the Missouri river. As there is no elsewhere from which to obtain these lambs in large supply, there is but one solution of this most serious problem, and that is for the feeders and their farmer neighbors to raise the lambs themselves.—American Sheep Breeder.

EARLY LAMBS.

Practical Suggestion In Regard to Their Care and Feeding.

When early lambs are expected, says the St. Louis Republic, provision should be made for them in advance. The ewes should have warm, dry quarters, and be well fed, so as to keep in thrifty condition. This is necessary if the lambs are to be strong and vigorous.

If the best profit is obtained from early lambs, they must make a rapid growth, so as to be of good size and weight in good season, and they must make a good growth from the start.

The ewes that are expected to lamb should be separated from the rest of the flock and put in a small pen by themselves.

If the ewes have been fed largely on corn, it will be best to lessen the amount of corn and feed a little bran and oilmeal. This will tend to loosen the bowels and lessen the tendency to fever.

See that the lambs suck. Sometimes the teats get covered with dirt or the wool around the udder gets matted together so that the lamb cannot suck. A little attention in good season will save the lambs. With dry, comfortable quarters, proper food and care, there should be very little loss of lambs, even in winter.

After the lamb sucks well there is little danger. When a day or two old, they may be turned in with the rest of the ewes and lambs. Feed the ewes lightly for a day or two and gradually increase after the milk comes well.

It should be remembered that the lambs must depend for their support and growth upon the dam's milk. If the ewe is to furnish a sufficient supply of milk to maintain a thrifty growth of the lambs, she must be well fed, and her ration must be a good milk producing one. Some corn or cornmeal may be given, but it should not be made an exclusive ration.

Ship stuff and bran with a little oilmeal can always be fed to advantage.

One of the cheapest and best feeds for sheep during the winter is unthrashed oats run through a cutting box, slightly dampened and liberally sprinkled with bran. To make up a variety feed good clover hay, with bran and cornmeal.

Bran is one of the best materials that can be fed with other materials for the production of milk. It can nearly always be made a part of the everyday ration of this class of animals.

Feed liberally, giving all that they will eat up clean.

Water every day and keep a supply of salt where they can help themselves. When 6 weeks old, the lambs can be taught to eat by placing a little wheat bran and cornmeal in a trough where they can readily get to it. Increase the quantity as they get accustomed to eating.

The Hog's Ups and Downs.

The hog trade just now furnishes another illustration of the tendency of American farmers to increase production beyond the line of profit after a period of remunerative prices. It has not been many years since hogs were so low as to be unprofitable. Then we saw hundreds of sucking pigs competing with poultry and game in our city markets, and thousands of brood sows in the slaughter pens. There was such a rush to "stand from under" the profitless swine business that prices went even below their legitimate level. In a few years this was followed by a violent reaction. The tide turned, and everybody wanted hogs. Brood sows were good property, sucking pigs were too dear to figure in the market, and those who had been most anxious to get out only a few years before were paying good prices to "get aboard" again. Now there is another reaction or low tide in the swine industry. Brood sows are being marketed by thousands. Tens of thousands of pigs are sent to market because hogs are low and corn is comparatively high. "Hogs don't pay" is the sentiment again. What will be the result? What has always occurred in such affairs is very likely to happen again. The reaction will come sooner or later. The ebb and flow of the tide of price and production are inevitable. But there is a lesson herein for the sagacious man who can look ahead to the next turning of the tide.—National Stockman.

The South For Cattle.

Texas has demonstrated the value of the cattle industry for the south and now the other southern states are following up the cattle industry with the introduction of the improved breeds. The whole south, with its perpetual grass and warm climate, is an ideal cattle country, and as the improved breeds are introduced prosperity and success will follow. Louisiana is going into the cattle raising business on a large scale. They claim there is no profit in growing cotton at 4 and 5 cents per pound. The sugar industry is at present their mainstay, but with cattle raising and feeding the state will enjoy wealth and happiness. And why not? The climate of Louisiana is mild, winters are seldom rigorous, grass is plentiful, and the soil all that could be desired for the growing of an abundance of millet, alfalfa, timothy and other forage crops.—Western Live Stock Journal.

Sheep Dip.

The use of lime and sulphur as a sheep dip will cure scab, but it is very injurious to sheep, often killing a great many, especially if they are dipped too soon after shearing, and to use these ingredients as a dip when the wool is long is almost equal to throwing the clip away.

What Angoras Are Doing.

President C. P. Bailey of the California Angora Goat Breeders' association has sold $8,000 worth of mohair and $8,000 worth of breeding Angoras within the past year. He says there is no danger of an oversupply of mohair for many years to come.

CALF'S HEAD SOUP.

How to Make This Nutritious and Inexpensive Delicacy.

Calf's head soup, while it sounds expensive, is perhaps one of the cheapest of the class, writes Mrs. Rorer in The Ladies' Home Journal. For this purchase a plain skinned calf's head and one or two trotters; have them well cleaned and cracked. Put the trotters in a kettle, thoroughly wash the head, remove the brains, take out the tongue and thoroughly cleanse the throat. Wash the head thoroughly in several cold waters, then scald and wash it again. Place it in a kettle with the trotters, and cover with five quarts of cold water. Simmer gently for three hours. Then add one onion in which you have stuck four cloves, one carrot sliced, a stick of celery, a turnip cut into quarters, a parsnip cut into halves, two bay leaves; cover and simmer one hour longer. Lift carefully the head and put it aside to cool. It is much better if you can stand it aside overnight.

Next morning remove the fat from the surface of the soup and turn it out. It will now be a solid jelly. Remove the sediment from the bottom, put the tongue aside, as you will not need it for the soup. Cut the meat from the head into blocks and put it aside. Into a large kettle put two tablespoonfuls of butter, add four tablespoonfuls of browned flour, mix. Add two quarts of the stock and stir constantly until boiling. Add a teaspoonful of kitchen bouquet, ordinary soup coloring, two teaspoonfuls of salt, a teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce and the meat. Stand over the fire where it will gradually come to the boiling point; place in the tureen. Cut into slices three hard boiled eggs and one lemon. Pour the soup over, and it will be ready to serve.

How to Clean Counterpanes.

As fine counterpanes are never so pretty after being washed, a careful housekeeper defers the evil day indefinitely by brushing carefully with a clothesbrush and then sponging with gasoline. Of course she will never attempt this where there is a fire. Outdoors is the place to clean with gasoline, and the article so cleaned should be left out in the air for several hours.

How to Manicure the Nails.

Pour some warm water in a bowl, unfold a small towel and lay it on one knee; take the right hand and proceed to cut the nails in a semicircle; then file the edges and steep the right hand in the water; then take the left hand and steep in its turn. Having carefully dried the hands, push down the skin round the base of the nails with an ivory instrument; brush the nails over with some red pomade, wipe it off and then polish with a plain chamois covered pad, rather small in size, using particularly fine polishing powder, till they shine. Then, to crown all, sprinkle on the hands and wrists and rub in some deliciously scented eau de camelia, which will at once make the skin look white, smooth and soft.

How to Curry Beef.

Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan. Add one sliced onion and stir until the onion is golden brown. Add a teaspoonful of curry and a tablespoonful of flour. Mix, add a half pint of stock and one pint of cold cooked beef chopped fine. When smoking hot, add a tablespoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and serve in a border of rice.

How to Fricassee Dried Beef.

Half a pound of dried beef, chipped fine. Scald it for ten minutes, drain and press dry. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter into a saucepan and when hot put in the beef. Stir and cook for three minutes. Then sprinkle over two tablespoonfuls of flour, mix and add one pint of milk. Stir until boiling. Add one dash of pepper and stand it over hot water until serving time. Then at the last moment make it hot, take from the fire and quickly stir in the yolks of two eggs.

How to Make Hominy Drop Cakes.

Heat in a farina kettle one pint of boiled hominy, broken into grains as lightly as possible with a fork. Beat two eggs separately and stir the yolks into the hominy with one tablespoonful of water and one-half teaspoonful of salt; then add the whites. Drop in tablespoonfuls on buttered tins and bake to a good brown in a quick oven.

How to Make Cornish Cutlets.

Take some slices of cold meat, either beef or mutton. Trim them into neat shapes. Dip each into catchup. Sprinkle with cayenne and salt. Boil some potatoes dry and mash them. Mix with them a little chopped lemon peel or cucumber pickle, pepper and salt. Bind with a well beaten egg.

Cover the slices of meat with the mashed potato, smoothing it into shape with a knife. Fry like cutlets to a golden color.

How to Make Devonshire Toast.

Spread some buttered toast lightly with bloater paste, then cover it thickly with clotted cream, garnish with shreds of bloater free from skin and bone, minced olives and shreds of red and green chillies.

How to Fatten the Face.

There is no specific treatment whereby the face may be fattened. Massage of the face and a fattening diet, especially the free use of nuts and nut preparations and avoidance of indigestible foods, with proper exercise and the morning cool bath, will be found very helpful. Massage should be applied to the face daily, and the face should be bathed with cold water for half a minute, this to be followed by vigorous rubbing three or four times a day.

How to Cook Breaded Sausages.

Wipe the sausages dry, dip them in beaten egg and bread crumbs, put into a frying basket and plunge in boiling fat. Cook ten minutes and serve with a

A New Trial Granted in Case of Meehan vs Zeh.

Judge Watts last week decided that the defendants in the case of Meehan Bros. vs. Phil and Mary Zeh were entitled to a new trial. The case was brought by the Meehan Bros. to enforce a lien on a building for which they had furnished the lumber. The case had been tried before Judge Ives and decided in favor of the Meehans. The grounds for a new trial are that notice of lien was not filed in the office of the register of deeds of the county in which the property is situated, but was filed in Polk county after Red Lake county had been organized by the proclamation of Gov. Clough, but before the officer who filled the position of register of deeds had qualified.—Crookston Times.

A Valuable Reference Work.

The Year Book and Almanac issued by the Globe Company, of St. Paul, is the best work of the kind which has come to our notice. Complete in every particular, it combines history and facts, statistics and general information, property classified and indexed in a manner which permits of instant reference. The statistics are most complete and admirably arranged for intelligent understanding. Sixty pages of the 500 which this wonderful book contains are devoted to Minnesota, and the political information is the most comprehensive and valuable ever published in the state. We bespeak for this work the consideration of every intelligent person in the state, and we can say without hesitancy that it is valuable alike to Merchant, Farmer, Mechanic, Sportsman or Politician.

The price of the book is 25 cents, mailed anywhere, and, considering the amount of information it contains, it is worth fully three times that amount.

Will Go to Cass Lake.

Judge Ives will, it is said, remove to Cass Lake, where he will resume the practice of law, and possibly start a paper. It is understood that he will be appointed to the position of U. S. commissioner for that district, and that is an office in which there will be considerable in the way of business, during the next few years.—Crookston Times.

Prison Made Twine.

The new binding twine bill which has passed provides that the price of binding twine shall be fixed each year by the warden and board of managers not later than March 1, and shall be sold to farmers and actual consumers in quantities necessary for their own use up to may 1. Cash must be paid, or security put up satisfactory to the board of managers. After May, 1,500,000 pounds must be reserved for consumers who have not yet ordered. The balance may be sold in car load lots to dealers in twine. This provision is a safeguard so as to avoid the trouble on the part of the agents in past years. Before the twine is delivered to the dealers, they must file with the warden a signed contract setting forth that they will not sell the twine at a greater profit than 1 cent per pound. The cost of the twine at the prison and the freight charges added are to be taken as the basis of cost on which the 1 cent profit may be figured.

Severed the Marriage Tie.

Judge Watts has decided the application for a divorce applied for by Karina Jensen, of Thief River Falls, from her husband, Sven Jensen, for which she applied at the term of court at Red Lake Falls last week. The decision is favorable to the applicant, and the marriage tie is accordingly severed, the grounds being cruel and inhuman treatment.

Mrs. L. J. Barnes, wife of the former Thief River Falls barber, who is now serving a sentence in the state's prison, was last week granted a divorce from her husband. She now resides at Aberdeen, S. D.

Has Hopes.

John Morgan, of St. Hilaire, now has hopes of being appointed fish and game warden. It has for some time been supposed that the appointment would go to a Duluth democrat. But Mr. Morgan thinks that his chances now are better, as the Duluth statesmen have no claim on the governor, since even the Democratic senator, as well as all the other legislators from the zenith city, voted to pass the sugar bounty appropriation bill over the governor's veto.—Minneapolis Times.

The next governor of the state of Minnesota will hail from north of the Twin Cities.

The Minneapolis Tribune building and contents was entirely destroyed by fire last week.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature making it a felony for pine land men to cut timber from land upon which the taxes are delinquent.

Senator Nelson has been invited by Secretary Alger to accompany him on his official visit to Cuba and Puerto Rico which he will make soon after the adjournment of congress.

Those who predict a long war with the Pilipinos are evidently indulging in false prophecy. The situation of the insurgents has already grown desperate and their submission at an early date may reasonably be anticipated.

The State Experimental farm at Crookston has two bills before the house and senate asking for an annual appropriation of $5,000 and a special appropriation of $10,000 for equipments to be used as follows: $2,000 for drainage and drainage experiments; $2,000 for stock, mostly cattle: $6,000 for cattle barns and sheep sheds.

A very bright and exceedingly humorous serial treating of student life and of social life in a college town will begin in the April Ladies' Home Journal. It is by Mrs. Charles Terry Collins, a novice in fiction, who has written with charming freshness, cleverly picturing student life, the students' games and sports, their social diversions, etc.. Into the deliciously droll story Mrs. Collins has subtly woven a most interesting, happy romance, from which the takes its name.—"A College Courtship."

Over in Germany, according to a report of Walter Schumann, the municipal savings banks have adopted a novel method for inducing the laboring classes and small shopkeepers to save their money. Instead of requiring depositors to bring their money to the bank, collectors go about once a week, usually on pay day, to their homes or places of occupation, and collect it. This system reaches the poorest class of people and those who would be least likely to save anything from their wages unless they were thus urged to do so. During the last year, in Mayence, the receipts under this system in a single bank amounted to $176,170, deposited by 5,799 persons, which was an average of $30.58 per capita. Among these were 244 persons who deposited an average of 11 cents a week; 1,697 who deposited an average of 23 cents; 1,730 an average of 47 cents; 973 an average of 71 cents; 194 averaged 95 cents; 604 averaged $1.19 and 357 averaged $2.38 a week.

The Litchfield Independent has the following words of commendation for our Republican legislature: "The Republican Minnesota legislature this winter is setting out to make a record for reform that has not been matched in the forty years that the party has been in power in the state. So far, however, the results actually accomplished are meagre, but a beginning has been made toward the most sweeping reforms. Perhaps the election of John Lind has worked the politicians up to the fact that the people are not asleep. At any rate reform is the watchword of the hour. Reform bills emanating from Republican members are as thick as leaves in Vallambrosia. The gross earnings tax paid by railroads is to be increased from 3 per cent. to 4 per cent., the Torrens land transfer system is to be inaugurated, the binding twine business is being investigated, the tax laws are to be changed, the divorce laws corrected and every evil attended to. We are glad to notice this sparm of virtue. Reform is what we want, no matter who is responsible for it.

Our Firemen Celebrate.

Next Wednesday our volunteer Fire Department will be five years old, and the members of the department have decided to use a portion of their surplus funds in a celebration for their friends and themselves to as great an extent as it will be possible to accommodate the people. The several city councils and the people at large have always responded so handsomely to any demands upon them by the firemen, that it was deemed best that the firemen acknowledge their kindness. Each fireman is to invite two couples to attend a dance and banquet the finest that money will afford free to all who are invited.

Every fireman is requested to be present at a special meeting to be held at the usual place at 7:30 o'clock Friday evening, March 3rd, 1899, and there to report the names of those he has invited. As it will be necessary to house all participants there has to be a limit to invitation, so it is believed no one will feel offended if not invited.

By Order of the Committee.

Wrestling Notes.

A wrestling match between Dellos Douglas and Hogan Larson at the Athletic club hall last Saturday evening proved to be the best one of the season. Both are unusually strong and the first round was a hard fought battle, but Douglas finally succeeded in landing Larson on his back. Larson came to the front for the second time but after wrestling a short time gave up as he was out of breath.

Next Tuesday night at the Athletic club hall, H. G. Dobner and Sam Bardelson, will wrestle, and this promises to be an interesting event.

Dellos Douglas wants to wrestle with Dave Benzie and has made a proposition to the latter that he can torow him three times inside of 30 minutes. It has not yet been accepted.

Sometime ago it was reported from some unreliable source that the gang saws were to be taken out of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company's mill to be put in at Crookston. How the report gained a foothold is hard to determine. Instead, new and improved machinery is being put in and especially in the planing mill so as to increase the capacity in order to handle the large stock of lumber they expect to manufacture this season.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

The village of Ada is rent and torn by a sensation which grew out of a debating society. At one of the meetings the question as to which is the greatest evil whisky or dancing, was the bone contention, and to prove his side of the case a clerk named Holman read extracts from a book entitled "From the Dancing Hall to Hell." This displeased the good people of the place and a committee of twenty-five citizens visited Holman and ordered him to leave the town. AT FORT THOMAS.

The moonlight lies softly upon beautiful Fort Thomas, lending a mystic and enchanting charm to the picturesque beauty.

The shadows cast by the thick foliage of late summer are mysterious and alluring, the tall elm trees lean toward each other and whisper softly and joyously together, and the huge gray water tower stands like a faithful sentinel, mutely calling out to each passerby: "Halt! Who goes there?"

Far out past the barracks, in the open country, under the white light of the harvest moon, lies a tiny white city—the camp of the Sixth and of the immunes. The noise and activity of the day are succeeded by the rest which comes with the starlight. The sentinels pace their silent beats and think with a thrill of joy that this is home. The mellow notes of a distant bugle sound through the stillness of the night. "Taps" is sounded, and all is quiet again.

Over and above all the rugged water tower keeps silent watch—a sentry who never sleeps, a soldier always on duty.

He hears the whispering elm trees and knows what they are saying. His heart is keenly sensitive, he has heard so much said concerning the subject which is most closely connected with his dearest hope, his wildest, fondest ambition. People had not seemed to consider his feelings. Perhaps they thought he hadn't any, for they had stood before him and critically discussed the details of the project which meant to him life, or—no, not death, for he was too strong to die—but mere existence contrasted with a career crowned with honor and glory. His strong nature quivered at the thought that he must see this opportunity pass him.

"It's sad, isn't it?" one of the elm trees was saying. "He wants it so much, and it seems as if he ought to have it. How I hope he will!"

"Yes," said the other, "but they say that there are so many details to take into consideration, and then things of this sort always move slowly, you know. That fine old fellow deserves it, and I believe he will get it yet."

When the water tower heard this, he couldn't keep still any longer. He felt the way one does whose heart and soul are bent toward accomplishing some dearly prized object and who has fought his way to it through many difficulties and discouragements. To such a one a word of sympathy, an expression of kindly interest, comes with the penetrating force of the warm sunshine which thaws the frozen mountain sides into countless hundreds of trickling little brooks.

He looked over at the elm trees and said gently: "You will pardon me, I know, but I couldn't help overhearing what you were saying just now, and I want to tell you just how it all seems to me.

"You may think it is presumptuous of me to want to wear a memorial of the Sixth, and maybe it is, but I can't help it. I do want it, and I want it more than I've ever wanted anything in my whole life. What makes me feel blue about it sometimes isn't so much because I'm afraid they're not going to let me wear it, but because I'm afraid they're not going to put it any place, and that would be awful, for the Sixth should have a memorial if ever a regiment—yes, or a hero—had one. I hear they are having trouble getting enough subscriptions for it, and that's what hurts me. I should think any one would be glad to give something to it. They would if they knew all that I do.

"But, then," he continued, "as I said before, I want to be the one to wear it. I've been here so long, you see, that I feel as if I belonged to the Sixth as much as any enlisted man. I've lived here with them all these years. I've watched them drill and guard and live the soldier life they love until I feel as if I was one of them. I've seen them work and I've seen them play, and I got so I loved them all. I know all the officers too. I've watched them going and coming all these years, sometimes happy and sometimes worried, but always gallant soldiers. I've seen them get on and off the cars here with their wives and children and sweethearts laughing and talking and having good times, and I don't think they ever realized how fond I am of them all and how I notice all the little things they do.

"When summers came, the regiment would march off to encampments, and after a few months they would come back healthy and brown and glad to get home again. Some of them said I was the first thing about the post that they saw on their way back and that I meant home to them.

"Then last spring, when the war broke out, they went again. You remember that day—when they marched out. I could tell you of things I saw that day and the days and nights before that—'goodbys' that turned out to be real farewells, of promises and prayers that were as sad as they were serious. Their faces had a different look that day. I remember it well.

"I used to think of them in Florida and Cuba and wonder what they were doing. I used to wonder how they would act in a real battle—most of the men had never seen real service—and then when I heard about the fevers and diseases of that country, although it wasn't very patriotic, I suppose, I wanted them back again safe at the post.

"You know what their record was in battle and in camp—I was proud, I can tell you, when I heard it—and you remember the night they came back! I had not thought it would be so sad—there were so few! And the officers—I had heard their families talk of them during their absence—and, too, I knew they weren't all coming, but I didn't realize it until I saw the regiment without them!

"Well," he said sadly, "maybe I'm not going to be the one to have this honor, but it seems to me if I did—if they would only get a memorial to the Sixth and let me wear it—I couldn't let them know it, but I'd be the proudest, happiest person at the post, and I believe the boys who were left down there in Cuba would like it too."

The elm trees were silent in the sincerity of their sympathy.

The soft, white moonlight pervaded the place like a tender benediction.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Audacity That Won.

"There is a sort of audacity," says a woman in the Chicago Inter Ocean, "which is almost admirable. I really felt provoked when the conductor on a North Side car persistently carried me two blocks beyond my destination, especially as I had been energetically signaling him for several minutes.

"'Why did you not stop when you saw me waving my hand?' I demanded. The conductor (he was young, good looking and Irish) bowed low in contrition.

"'But, upon me honor, ma'am, I thought yo was throwing me a kiss,' he said."

RIDICULOUS.

Glenville road was situated in the most fashionable part of a pretty London suburb and boasted of a number of small and large houses, all of different ages and architecture, which came as a welcome relief after the rows and rows of modestly constructed dwelling houses so frequently seen.

At 8 Glenville road, a large, squarely built, house of somewhat ancient appearance lived an elderly widow, her two sons and her niece, the latter of whom had been engaged to the elder son, Edwin, for the last ten years, and who seemed as near her wedding day at the time of her betrothal as at the time our story opens.

But Miss Lancaster was seemingly content with life, until the little cottage on the opposite side of the road at last secured a tenant, a circumstance which Mr. Edwin seemed to take an extraordinary interest in since the tenant was a remarkably prepossessing little woman—a widow, rich in the possession of a small annual income and a very pretty face.

The wedding day seemed further off than ever after the little widow had resided in Glenville road for the space of six weeks, and one day after peeping through the blinds and seeing the fickle couple going off together to some place of amusement, Miss Lancaster gave way to grief and was found by her younger cousin, Herbert, sobbing as if her heart would break on the sofa.

"What's up, Belle?" said he anxiously. "You haven't been yourself for some time. What's troubling you?"

And Miss Lancaster's pride, which had been dissolved in her tears, gave way altogether, and she confided her woes to her sympathetic listener and asked his advice as to whether she should give his brother his freedom.

"Nonsense," said Herbert warmly. "Ted's all right. It's the woman's fault. You know men are very susceptible to pretty women who run after them. He's lots fonder of you."

"Do you think so?" said Belle, drying her eyes and looking up brightly. "She is so much younger and prettier than I—I was afraid."

"Don't you worry yourself about that," returned her cousin kindly. "Do you suppose Grace is jealous of every pretty woman I speak to?"

"But you are not engaged to Grace."

"Oh, but I shall be if she'll have me, and now cheer up, old girl. Fretting was never a beautifier of the complexion, you know."

That evening Herbert made up his mind to interfere for the first time in other people's business. Edward was going a bit too far, and the affair must be stopped. He mused for a long time on the best manner of doing it, and at last decided that the wisest thing to do was to make love to the widow himself, even at the risk of offending the young lady he had set his affections upon.

And he did, too, and found making love to the widow a very easy and pleasant undertaking. Nearly every evening was spent at the cottage, and the little widow, delighted at her new conquest, became so cold about her former one that success for his scheme was promised from the first. She was so pretty and had such winning manners that before long the younger brother began to excuse the elder for his infatuation and feel sorry for him and his unfortunate engagement.

One afternoon, after escorting the widow home from a walk, Herbert thought of Grace with a pang of dutiful reproach and, getting on his bicycle, rode off whistling to call upon her.

When he arrived at the house he found Grace very chatty and cordial, but with an entirely different manner about her which profoundly puzzled him until he caught the sparkle of a ring upon her finger.

"You will be pleased, I know, to hear that I am engaged," she said half shyly. "And I am sure you will be able to congratulate, since you intend to commit matrimony yourself."

"I!" gasped Herbert in astonishment.

"Oh, yes; don't pretend not to understand. I have heard all about that fascinating little widow that lives opposite to you, and I am sure I hope you will be very happy indeed."

She talked a lot about her coming marriage and her fiance, and Herbert sat and listened in a dazed kind of manner until the appearance of the newly elected bridegroom woke him up to the fact that his presence was not exactly required. On his way home he met his brother and cousin starting out for a walk.

"Congratulations!" shouted Edwin like a lunatic, pulling him off his bicycle. "Oh, you artful man!" said Belle, turning up her eyes. "No wonder you were so ready to"— But she stopped suddenly and looked up at Edwin in confusion.

"What is the meaning of all this?" said the cyclist angrily.

"Why, we have just heard of Grace's engagement and that you are bent on following suit. We met Mrs. Law"—

"You don't mean to say," gasped Herbert, "you said anything to her about"—

"We did, indeed," said Belle, "and she looked so pleased."

And Herbert inwardly groaned, and without further remark rode off home for all he was worth. But when he reached Glenville road he was so absentminded that he wheeled his bicycle straight up to the cottage and before he knew what he was doing found himself in the back garden of the widow's snug little home.

Strangely enough, there was Mrs. Lawrence sitting upon the garden seat and looking so youthful and charming that he felt quite confused at his audacity and nervously accepted her invitation to sit down.

"I came," he began, "to make a clean breast of everything to you. I haven't treated you fairly, Mrs. Lawrence. I"—

"Dear, dear!" said the little widow, brightly. "What's all this about? You haven't anything to reproach yourself about. Don't you suppose I know perfectly well why you have made yourself so amiable to me all along?"

"How you must despise me!" groaned Herbert.

"Not at all," smiled Mrs. Lawrence. "I admired you for it. You did it for that other woman's sake, and a disinterested motive is always a commendable one."

"Do you know what people are saying of us?" said Herbert regretfully.

"No—what?" asked the widow in innocent wonder.

"That we are engaged to be married."

"How absurd!" said the widow faintly.

"Is it so very absurd?" demanded the young man. "Is it, Blanche?"

"Ridiculous!" said the little widow as her head fell gently upon his shoulder.—Cincinnati Herald.

SECOND THOUGHT.

Arthur Rayburn had taken a long walk alone that afternoon, alone by the seaside. He had watched the last preparations for the sailing of the Whirlpool for Liberia. As he had watched a sudden thought had suggested itself to him. He had stood still a moment apparently in hesitation. Then the strange, wild impulse had seemed to take complete possession of him. He walked quickly to where the sailors were at work.

"At what time does this boat set sail?" he inquired.

"The last boat goes out to the ship at 11 tonight," replied a sailor, and with a determined expression on his face the young man turned away and walked quickly homeward.

In that quaint little seaboard city Arthur Rayburn had lived since childhood. There, too, had lived Norma Burton, and there together they had passed the happiest years of their lives. Arthur had loved Norma; he had loved the sleepy little city; he had been in love with life. Then there had come a change. Three years before Norma Burton had moved away. Instantly all was changed. The bright days grew grey. Even the old town was not what it had been. Arthur Rayburn became sick of it—of its dead level monotony. He longed to go away, to leave it forever behind him.

But all this was before her return. A month ago she had come back for a visit with her sister. Norma Burton had come back, and, lo, the sleepy little city, the town that had been so unbearably dull had undergone another change! Again it was bright and wholesome and sunny. Again Arthur Rayburn loved the city of his birth. Again he was in love with life. He understood it all. He had thought it all over, and that afternoon in his lonely walk by the seashore he had come to a conclusion.

That evening he waited for Norma in his father's library. He had asked her to meet him there, and she had promised to do so. As he waited he more than once glanced anxiously at the clock. He knew she would keep her appointment, but time was precious. At last he heard a light step in the hall and opened the door. She entered, and he closed the door behind her.

No wonder the old town had changed with her coming and going! She was all brightness, all gladness, all warmth.

"Norma," he said earnestly, "I have asked you to come here for a special reason."

She was about to make some light reply, but glancing up at him she caught the tense expression of his face. She was sobered in an instant. A quick tumult in her heart foretold the crisis approaching.

"Don't, Arthur!" she exclaimed in a tone that was almost pleading.

"I must," he returned desperately. "I suppose I know your answer without asking, but I feel that I must hear it from your own lips. I love you, dearest, and I ask you to be my wife. Think a moment O Norma. I know you do not care for me as I care for you, but can't you learn to love me?" There was intense emotion in his voice, and Arthur could see that she was deeply moved. Her face turned pale as he was speaking, and he knew that she was suffering. He hated himself for hurting her, but he waited for her to speak.

"I know—I was afraid," she began, falteringly. Then, looking straight into his eyes, she continued: "I love you as the friend of my childhood, Arthur. I cannot honestly say more." A sudden wave of tenderness came over her, and she added, "You know I would if I could!"

In spite of his pain, Arthur Rayburn smiled.

"Yes, dear," he said, touched by her sympathy. "I believe you would if you could."

There was a moment's silence; then Arthur spoke again.

"I am going away, Norma," he said. "I am going to sail on the Whirlpool. I shall probably never see you again, but I shall always prize your friendship and shall always wish for your happiness." He tried to smile bravely as he added, "And I believe I shall always be glad to remember that you would have loved me if you could."

He opened the door for her. She looked up at him through tears, and he bent and kissed her forehead. Then he closed the door behind her. He listened to her footsteps as she passed along the hall, and he sat down at his father's desk and wrote steadily for a long time.

Suddenly he stopped writing and sat for a moment as though lost in thought. After a time he rose and walked to the window that looked out upon the harbor. For some moments he stood gazing out into the starry darkness. When he turned away from the window a new light shone in his eyes and there was a determined expression about his mouth.

"No, sir," he said as though addressing some one. "No, sir, I will never skulk away and hide myself like a miserable coward! She respects me—at least. I will be worthy of her respect."

Walking steadily to the desk, he gathered up the letters he had written and tossed them into the open grate. The clock struck 10.

He sank into a great chair before the fire, and for a long time sat buried in thought. He reviewed his past, a past which, taken as a whole, had not been unhappy. He dwelt longest on these years when Norma had been with him, when they had enjoyed life, as children, together. Then he thought of the future, and involuntarily glanced at the clock. It was not yet too late, but he made no move. He had put his hand to the plow and had no intention of turning back. He would hold on, however hard the way appeared before him.

At that moment he heard a light step in the hall. Before he could reach the door it opened softly, and a second later the girl he loved was in his arms.

It was he who first broke the long silence.

"You are crying, dearest," he said gently.

"I was afraid," she faltered through her tears, "afraid you had sailed on the Whirlpool."

"No, Norma," he said. "On sober second thought I changed my mind, and I am glad it was in time."—Annie R. Young in Boston Post.

The Case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs.

J. E. & B. E. BURKEE

Postponed Until Monday, March 27.

Testimony in the case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs. John E. and Bowre E. Burkee, copartners as Burkee Bros., was taken last Thursday afternoon in the office of Attorney Lee before the referee, Court Stenographer Strawbridge. The first named firm holds a judgment against the latter, and it was with a view of securing the payment for the same that the suit was begun. H. W. Lee appeared for the plaintiffs and Ira C. Richardson for the defendants. The testimony showed that in the fall of 1882 the defendants formed a partnership and conducted a general store at St. Hilaire. B. E. Burkee put $1,700 into the enterprise and J. E. Burkee put $200 and a farm in Wisconsin. J. E. Burkee's wife also put $800 into the store, and an uncle, John Bergoust, also was interested in the firm, but withdrew subsequent to the failure and took a mortgage of $2,500 upon the store building. A house and lot was also sold for $500 and the money was paid to Bergoust. The firm was closed up by a St. Paul attorney, and the stock was disposed of to E. M. Hoff for $300. The firm's liabilities at that time were about $5,000, although they have no books or accounts to show the exact amount. Mr. Hoff continued the business from that time on, and both of the Burkees worked for him and received $50 per month for about a year and a half. J. E. Burkee then came to Thief River Falls and went to work for Hans Langseth as a clerk at $60 per month. The books showed that his wages were credited each year to his wife, who also was advancing money at different times to Mr. Langseth on which he paid interest at the rate of ten per cent. Two clerks also boarded with the Burkees at $24 per month. On the 8th day of January, 1895, a written agreement was drawn up between Hans Langseth and Mary Burkee, John Burkee's wife, and the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed, each being a half owner in the concern. The books Jan. 8, 1895 showed that Hans Langseth owed to Mary Burkee the sum of $3,230.85, which was turned in as her half. John Burkee's wages, which had been placed at the credit of Mrs. Burkee, amounted to $2,400, and the board amounted to $816, or a total of $3,216.

Mr. Langseth testified that at the time the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed the stock was valued at $7,000, and that he owed $7,000; that he could not pay Mary Burkee the $3,230.85 which he owed to her, nor could he afford to continue to pay J. E. Burkee $60 per month and so he gave her a half interest in a business which had assets of $7,000 and liabilities of $7,000. The store building and the outstanding accounts, he said, belonged to him. The farm, on which they still owe $2,500, belonged to the firm. Mr. Langseth stated that the profits of the firm for the best year since 1895 was, as shown by the books, $3,500; that the poorest year showed a loss of $2,000; that the books showed that since 1895 they had made the sum of $5,000, but that he did not think it would amount to that much when it was taken into consideration that there were some bad debts outstanding and that there had been a shrinkage in values of merchandise, in fact, he said, we stand about where we were in '95. Mr. Langseth said that Mr. Burkee took an active interest in the store, but not on his own behalf as he was there simply as the agent of his wife, Mary Burkee, and that he was not paid any salary. Asked if J. E. Burkee even received any money, he said that he did at different times and it was charged up to Mary.

J. E. Burkee testified that he took an active interest in business of Hans Langseth & Co., for "why shouldn't I," he said, "I am a hired man there." Witness also said that he had not received any pay since 1895, but that he was drawing about $700 per year out of the business with which to support his family. Mr. Burkee also tried to solicit the sympathy of the court by saying that his health was very poor; that he had paid out considerable in doctor bills for himself and family, and that he was paying his debts as fast as he could.

J. E. Burkee testified that he had worked for E. M. Hoff practically ever since the failure, that for the first year and a half he received $50 per month, the next three months $45 per month, and that since then he had worked without any stated salary per month and did not know how much he was receiving; that he was living in the rear of the store building owned by Burkee Bros. and that he paid no rent; that it cost him from $35 to $40 per month to live, and that he would sell all of the furniture in his house for $25. He said he had collected rent for the store building when it was occupied and used the money to pay the taxes and interest on the mortgage.

An adjournment was taken until Monday, March 27, at which time additional testimony will be taken, and then the matter will be submitted to Judge Watts.

Athletic Club Wrestlers.

A fair sized crowd was at the Athletic club hall last Saturday evening to witness two wrestling contests. Dellos Douglas was to throw Dave Benzie three times inside of thirty minutes, and at the beginning it looked as if he would be successful. He threw Benzie twice in 3½ minutes, but in the third round Benzie got a chock hold upon him and won.

The next contest was between Isador Lewin and Fred Miller, and the latter succeeded in throwing the former after a hard fought battle.

FOR HONOR

For Blood and a Good Sized Purse.

Saturday evening, March 11, is the date now fixed for the much talked of wrestling match between Harry G. Dobner and Sam Bardelson. The event is to take place in Hamre's hall and it will be under the management of Chas. Hoar, who has had posters printed saying that the match will be for blood—and a good sized purse. Both of the gentlemen who will participate in the wrestling match are doing considerable training and a moderate amount of boasting, which indicates that the one that goes down will fall hard.

Successful Operation

An operation was performed last week by Dr. Dunlop, assisted by Dr. Watson, of Red Lake Falls, upon a son of Sibley La Bree, of Thief River Falls, who was brought to Crookston for that purpose, for a case of spinal byphides. It is a rare case and the operation was successful, the patient resting easy and the case progressing along expected lines.—Crookston Times

AT FORT THOMAS.

The moonlight lies softly upon beautiful Fort Thomas, lending a mystic and enchanting charm to the picturesque beauty.

The shadows cast by the thick foliage of late summer are mysterious and alluring, the tall elm trees lean toward each other and whisper softly and joyously together, and the huge gray water tower stands like a faithful sentinel, mutely calling out to each passerby: "Halt! Who goes there?"

Far out past the barracks, in the open country, under the white light of the harvest moon, lies a tiny white city—the camp of the Sixth and of the Immunes. The noise and activity of the day are succeeded by the rest which comes with the starlight. The sentinels pace their silent beats and think with a thrill of joy that this is home. The mellow notes of a distant bugle sound through the stillness of the night. "Taps" is sounded, and all is quiet again.

Over and above all the rugged water tower keeps silent watch—a sentry who never sleeps, a soldier always on duty.

He hears the whispering elm trees and knows what they are saying. His heart is keenly sensitive, he has heard so much said concerning the subject which is most closely connected with his dearest hope, his wildest, fondest ambition. People had not seemed to consider his feelings. Perhaps they thought he hadn't any, for they had stood before him and critically discussed the details of the project which meant to him life, or—no, not death, for he was too strong to die—but mere existence contrasted with a career crowned with honor and glory. His strong nature quivered at the thought that he must see this opportunity pass him.

"It's sad, isn't it?" one of the elm trees was saying. "He wants it so much, and it seems as if he ought to have it. How I hope he will!"

"Yes," said the other, "but they say that there are so many details to take into consideration, and then things of this sort always move slowly, you know. That fine old fellow deserves it, and I believe he will get it yet."

When the water tower heard this, he couldn't keep still any longer. He felt the way one does whose heart and soul are bent toward accomplishing some dearly prized object and who has fought his way to it through many difficulties and discouragements. To such a one a word of sympathy, an expression of kindly interest, comes with the penetrating force of the warm sunshine which thaws the frozen mountain sides into countless hundreds of trickling little brooks.

He looked over at the elm trees and said gently: "You will pardon me, I know, but I couldn't help overhearing what you were saying just now, and I want to tell you just how it all seems to me.

"You may think it is presumptuous of me to want to wear a memorial of the Sixth, and maybe it is, but I can't help it. I do want it, and I want it more than I've ever wanted anything in my whole life. What makes me feel blue about it sometimes isn't so much because I'm afraid they're not going to let me wear it, but because I'm afraid they're not going to put it any place, and that would be awful, for the Sixth should have a memorial if ever a regiment—yes, or a hero—had one. I hear they are having trouble getting enough subscriptions for it, and that's what hurts me. I should think any one would be glad to give something to it. They would if they knew all that I do.

"But, then," he continued, "as I said before, I want to be the one to wear it. I've been here so long, you see, that I feel as if I belonged to the Sixth as much as any enlisted man. I've lived here with them all these years. I've watched them drill and guard and live the soldier life they love until I feel as if I was one of them. I've seen them work and I've seen them play, and I got so I loved them all. I know all the officers too. I've watched them going and coming all these years, sometimes happy and sometimes worried, but always gallant soldiers. I've seen them get on and off the cars here with their wives and children and sweethearts laughing and talking and having good times, and I don't think they ever realized how fond I am of them all and how I notice all the little things they do.

"When summers came, the regiment would march off to encampments, and after a few months they would come back healthy and brown and glad to get home again. Some of them said I was the first thing about the post that they saw on their way back and that I meant home to them.

"Then last spring, when the war broke out, they went again. You remember that day—when they marched out. I could tell you of things I saw that day and the days and nights before that—of 'goodbys' that turned out to be real farewells, of promises and prayers that were as sad as they were serious. Their faces had a different look that day. I remember it well.

"I used to think of them in Florida and Cuba and wonder what they were doing. I used to wonder how they would act in a real battle—most of the men had never seen real service—and then when I heard about the fevers and diseases of that country, although it wasn't very patriotic, I suppose, I wanted them back again safe at the post.

"You know what their record was in battle and in camp—I was proud, I can tell you, when I heard it—and you remember the night they came back! I had not thought it would be so sad—there were so few! And the officers—I had heard their families talk of them during their absence—and, too, I knew they weren't all coming, but I didn't realize it until I saw the regiment without them!

"Well," he said sadly, "maybe I'm not going to be the one to have this honor, but it seems to me if I did—if they would only get a memorial to the Sixth and let me wear it—I couldn't let them know it, but I'd be the proudest, happiest person at the post, and I believe the boys who were left down there in Cuba would like it too."

The elm trees were silent in the sincerity of their sympathy.

The soft, white moonlight pervaded the place like a tender benediction.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Audacity That Won.

"There is a sort of audacity," says a woman in the Chicago Inter Ocean, "which is almost admirable. I really felt provoked when the conductor on a North Side car persistently carried me two blocks beyond my destination, especially as I had been energetically signaling him for several minutes.

"'Why did you not stop when you saw me waving my hand?' I demanded. The conductor (he was young, good looking and Irish) bowed low in contrition.

"'But, upon me honor, ma'am, I thought ye was throwing me a kiss,' he said."

RIDICULOUS.

Glenville road was situated in the most fashionable part of a pretty London suburb and boasted of a number of small and large houses, all of different ages and architecture, which came as a welcome relief after the rows and rows of modestly constructed dwelling houses so frequently seen.

At 8 Glenville road, a large, squarely built, house of somewhat ancient appearance lived an elderly widow, her two sons and her niece, the latter of whom had been engaged to the elder son, Edwin, for the last ten years, and who seemed as near her wedding day at the time of her betrothal as at the time our story opens.

But Miss Lancaster was seemingly content with life, until the little cottage on the opposite side of the road at last secured a tenant, a circumstance which Mr. Edwin seemed to take an extraordinary interest in since the tenant was a remarkably prepossessing little woman—a widow, rich in the possession of a small annual income and a very pretty face.

The wedding day seemed further off than ever after the little widow had resided in Glenville road for the space of six weeks, and one day after peeping through the blinds and seeing the fickle couple going off together to some place of amusement, Miss Lancaster gave way to grief and was found by her younger cousin, Herbert, sobbing as if her heart would break on the sofa.

"What's up, Belle?" said he anxiously. "You haven't been yourself for some time. What's troubling you?"

And Miss Lancaster's pride, which had been dissolved in her tears, gave way altogether, and she confided her woes to her sympathetic listener and asked his advice as to whether she should give his brother his freedom.

"Nonsense," said Herbert warmly, "Ted's all right. It's the woman's fault. You know men are very susceptible to pretty women who run after them. He's lots fonder of you."

"Do you think so?" said Belle, drying her eyes and looking up brightly. "She is so much younger and prettier than I—I was afraid."

"Don't you worry yourself about that," returned her cousin kindly. "Do you suppose Grace is jealous of every pretty woman I speak to?"

"But you are not engaged to Grace."

"Oh, but I shall be if she'll have me, and now cheer up, old girl. Fretting was never a beautifier of the complexion, you know."

That evening Herbert made up his mind to interfere for the first time in other people's business. Edward was going a bit too far, and the affair must be stopped. He mused for a long time on the best manner of doing it, and at last decided that the wisest thing to do was to make love to the widow himself, even at the risk of offending the young lady he had set his affections upon.

And he did, too, and found making love to the widow a very easy and pleasant undertaking. Nearly every evening was spent at the cottage, and the little widow, delighted at her new conquest, became so cold about her former one that success for his scheme was promised from the first. She was so pretty and had such winning manners that before long the younger brother began to excuse the elder for his infatuation and feel sorry for him and his unfortunate engagement.

One afternoon, after escorting the widow home from a walk, Herbert thought of Grace with a pang of dutiful reproach and, getting on his bicycle, rode off whistling to call upon her.

When he arrived at the house he found Grace very chatty and cordial, but with an entirely different manner about her which profoundly puzzled him until he caught the sparkle of a ring upon her finger.

"You will be pleased, I know, to hear that I am engaged," she said half shyly. "And I am sure you will be able to congratulate, since you intend to commit matrimony yourself."

"I!" gasped Herbert in astonishment.

"Oh, yes; don't pretend not to understand. I have heard all about that fascinating little widow that lives opposite to you, and I am sure I hope you will be very happy indeed."

She talked a lot about her coming marriage and her fiance, and Herbert sat and listened in a dazed kind of manner until the appearance of the newly elected bridegroom woke him up to the fact that his presence was not exactly required. On his way home he met his brother and cousin starting out for a walk.

"Congratulations!" shouted Edwin like a lunatic, pulling him off his bicycle. "Oh, you artful man!" said Belle, turning up her eyes. "No wonder you were so ready to"— But she stopped suddenly and looked up at Edwin in confusion.

"What is the meaning of all this?" said the cyclist angrily.

"Why, we have just heard of Grace's engagement and that you are bent on following suit. We met Mrs. Law"—

"You don't mean to say," gasped Herbert, "you said anything to her about"—

"We did, indeed," said Belle, "and she looked so pleased."

And Herbert inwardly groaned, and without further remark rode off home for all he was worth. But when he reached Glenville road he was so absentminded that he wheeled his bicycle straight up to the cottage and before he knew what he was doing found himself in the back garden of the widow's snug little home.

Strangely enough, there was Mrs. Lawrence sitting upon the garden seat and looking so youthful and charming that he felt quite confused at his audacity and nervously accepted her invitation to sit down.

"I came," he began, "to make a clean breast of everything to you. I haven't treated you fairly, Mrs. Lawrence. I"—

"Dear, dear!" said the little widow, brightly. "What's all this about? You haven't anything to reproach yourself about. Don't you suppose I know perfectly well why you have made yourself so amiable to me all along?"

"How you must despise me!" groaned Herbert.

"Not at all," smiled Mrs. Lawrence. "I admired you for it. You did it for that other woman's sake, and a disinterested motive is always a commendable one."

"Do you know what people are saying of us?" said Herbert regretfully.

"No—what?" asked the widow in innocent wonder.

"That we are engaged to be married."

"How absurd!" said the widow faintly.

"Is it so very absurd?" demanded the young man. "Is it, Blanche?"

"Ridiculous!" said the little widow as her head fell gently upon his shoulder.—Cincinnati Herald.

SECOND THOUGHT.

Arthur Rayburn had taken a long walk alone that afternoon, along by the seaside. He had watched the last preparations for the sailing of the Whirlpool for Liberia. As he had watched a sudden thought had suggested itself to him. He had stood still a moment apparently in hesitation. Then the strange, wild impulse had seemed to take complete possession of him. He walked quickly to where the sailors were at work.

"At what time does this boat set sail?" he inquired.

"The last boat goes out to the ship at 11 tonight," replied a sailor, and with a determined expression on his face the young man turned away and walked quickly homeward.

In that quaint little seaboard city Arthur Rayburn had lived since childhood. There, too, had lived Norma Burton, and there together they had passed the happiest years of their lives. Arthur had loved Norma; he had loved the sleepy little city; he had been in love with life. Then there had come a change. Three years before Norma Burton had moved away. Instantly all was changed. The bright days grew gray. Even the old town was not what it had been. Arthur Rayburn became sick of it—of its dead level monotony. He longed to go away, to leave it forever behind him.

But all this was before her return. A month ago she had come back for a visit with her sister. Norma Burton had come back, and, lo, the sleepy little city, the town that had been so unbearably dull had undergone another change! Again it was bright and wholesome and sunny. Again Arthur Rayburn loved the city of his birth. Again he was in love with life. He understood it all. He had thought it all over, and that afternoon in his lonely walk by the seashore he had come to a conclusion.

That evening he waited for Norma in his father's library. He had asked her to meet him there, and she had promised to do so. As he waited he more than once glanced anxiously at the clock. He knew she would keep her appointment, but time was precious. At last he heard a light step in the hall and opened the door. She entered, and he closed the door behind her.

No wonder the old town had changed with her coming and going! She was all brightness, all gladness, all warmth.

"Norma," he said earnestly, "I have asked you to come here for a special reason."

She was about to make some light reply, but glancing up at him she caught the tense expression of his face. She was sobered in an instant. A quick tumult in her heart foretold the crisis approaching.

"Don't, Arthur!" she exclaimed in a tone that was almost pleading.

"I must," he returned desperately. "I suppose I know your answer without asking, but I feel that I must hear it from your own lips. I love you, dearest, and I ask you to be my wife. Think a moment O Norma. I know you do not care for me as I care for you, but can't you learn to love me?" There was intense emotion in his voice, and Arthur could see that she was deeply moved. Her face turned pale as he was speaking, and he knew that she was suffering. He hated himself for hurting her, but he waited for her to speak.

"I know—I was afraid," she began, falteringly. Then, looking straight into his eyes, she continued: "I love you as the friend of my childhood, Arthur. I cannot honestly say more." A sudden wave of tenderness came over her, and she added, "You know I would if I could!"

In spite of his pain, Arthur Rayburn smiled.

"Yes, dear," he said, touched by her sympathy, "I believe you would if you could."

There was a moment's silence; then Arthur spoke again:

"I am going away, Norma," he said. "I am going to sail on the Whirlpool. I shall probably never see you again, but I shall always prize your friendship and shall always wish for your happiness." He tried to smile bravely as he added, "And I believe I shall always be glad to remember that you would have loved me if you could."

He opened the door for her. She looked up at him through tears, and he bent and kissed her forehead. Then he closed the door behind her. He listened to her footsteps as she passed along the hall, and he sat down at his father's desk and wrote steadily for a long time.

Suddenly he stopped writing and sat for a moment as though lost in thought. After a time he rose and walked to the window that looked out upon the harbor. For some moments he stood gazing out into the starry darkness. When he turned away from the window a new light shone in his eyes and there was a determined expression about his mouth.

"No, sir," he said as though addressing some one. "No, sir, I will never skulk away and hide myself like a miserable coward! She respects me—at least. I will be worthy of her respect."

Walking steadily to the desk, he gathered up the letters he had written and tossed them into the open grate. The clock struck 10.

He sank into a great chair before the fire, and for a long time sat buried in thought. He reviewed his past, a past which, taken as a whole, had not been unhappy. He dwelt longest on these years when Norma had been with him, when they had enjoyed life, as children, together. Then he thought of the future, and involuntarily glanced at the clock. It was not yet too late, but he made no move. He had put his hand to the plow and had no intention of turning back. He would hold on, however hard the way appeared before him.

At that moment he heard a light step in the hall. Before he could reach the door it opened softly, and a second later the girl he loved was in his arms.

It was he who first broke the long silence.

"You are crying, dearest," he said gently.

"I was afraid," she faltered through her tears, "afraid you had sailed on the Whirlpool."

"No, Norma," he said. "On sober second thought I changed my mind, and I am glad it was in time."—Annie R. Young in Boston Post.

The Case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs.

J. E. & B. E. BURKEE

Postponed Until Monday, March 27.

Testimony in the case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs. John E. and Bowre E. Burkee, copartners as Burkee Bros., was taken last Thursday afternoon in the office of Attorney Lee before the referee, Court Stenographer Strawbridge. The first named firm holds a judgment against the latter, and it was with a view of securing the payment for the same that the suit was begun. H. W. Lee appeared for the plaintiffs and Ira C. Richardson for the defendants. The testimony showed that in the fall of 1882 the defendants formed a partnership and conducted a general store at St. Hilaire. B. E. Burkee put $1,700 into the enterprise and J. E. Burkee put $200 and a farm in Wisconsin. J. E. Burkee's wife also put $800 into the store, and an uncle, John Bergoust, also was interested in the firm, but withdrew subsequent to the failure and took a mortgage of $2,500 upon the store building. A house and lot was also sold for $500 and the money was paid to Bergoust. The firm was closed up by a St. Paul attorney, and the stock was disposed of to E. M. Hoff for $300. The firm's liabilities at that time were about $5,000, although they have no books or accounts to show the exact amount. Mr. Hoff continued the business from that time on, and both of the Burkees worked for him and received $50 per month for about a year and a half. J. E. Burkee then came to Thief River Falls and went to work for Hans Langseth as a clerk at $60 per month. The books showed that his wages were credited each year to his wife, who also was advancing money at different times to Mr. Langseth on which he paid interest at the rate of ten per cent. Two clerks also boarded with the Burkees at $24 per month. On the 8th day of January, 1895, a written agreement was drawn up between Hans Langseth and Mary Burkee, John Burkee's wife, and the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed, each being a half owner in the concern. The books Jan. 8, 1895 showed that Hans Langseth owed to Mary Burkee the sum of $3,230.85, which was turned in as her half. John Burkee's wages, which had been placed at the credit of Mrs. Burkee, amounted to $2,400, and the board amounted to $816, or a total of $3,216.

Mr. Langseth testified that at the time the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed the stock was valued at $7,000, and that he owed $7,000; that he could not pay Mary Burkee the $3,230.85 which he owed to her, nor could he afford to continue to pay J. E. Burkee $60 per month and so he gave her a half interest in a business which had assets of $7,000 and liabilities of $7,000. The store building and the outstanding accounts, he said, belonged to him. The farm, on which they still owe $2,500, belonged to the firm. Mr. Langseth stated that the profits of the firm for the best year since 1895 was, as shown by the books, $1,500; that the poorest year showed a loss of $2,000; that the books showed that since 1895 they had made the sum of $5,000, but that he did not think it would amount to that much when it was taken into consideration that there were some bad debts outstanding and that there had been a shrinkage in values of merchandise, in fact, he said, we stand about where we were in '95. Mr. Langseth said that Mr. Burkee took an active interest in the store, but not on his own behalf as he was there simply as the agent of his wife, Mary Burkee, and that he was not paid any salary. Asked if J. E. Burkee even received any money, he said that he did at different times and it was charged up to Mary.

J. E. Burkee testified that he took an active interest in business of Hans Langseth & Co., for "why shouldn't I," he said, "I am a hired man there." Witness also said that he had not received any pay since 1895, but that he was drawing about $700 per year out of the business with which to support his family. Mr. Burkee also tried to solicit the sympathy of the court by saying that his health was very poor; that he had paid out considerable in doctor bills for himself and family, and that he was paying his debts as fast as he could.

J. E. Burkee testified that he had worked for E. M. Hoff practically ever since the failure, that for the first year and a half he received $50 per month, the next three months $45 per month, and that since then he had worked without any stated salary per month and did not know how much he was receiving; that he was living in the rear of the store building owned by Burkee Bros. and that he paid no rent; that it cost him from $35 to $40 per month to live, and that he would sell all of the furniture in his house for $25. He said he had collected rent for the store building when it was occupied and used the money to pay the taxes and interest on the mortgage.

An adjournment was taken until Monday, March 27, at which time additional testimony will be taken, and then the matter will be submitted to Judge Watts.

Athletic Club Wrestlers.

A fair sized crowd was at the Athletic club hall last Saturday evening to witness two wrestling contests. Dellos Douglas was to throw Dave Benzie three times inside of thirty minutes, and at the beginning it looked as if he would be successful. He threw Benzie twice in 3½ minutes, but in the third round Benzie got a chock hold upon him and won.

The next contest was between Isedor Lewin and Fred Miller, and the latter succeeded in throwing the former after a hard fought battle.

FOR HONOR

For Blood and a Good Sized Purse.

Saturday evening, March 11, is the date now fixed for the much talked of wrestling match between Harry G. Dobner and Sam Bardelson. The event is to take place in Hamre's hall and it will be under the management of Chas. Hoar, who has had posters printed saying that the match will be for blood—and a good sized purse. Both of the gentlemen who will participate in the wrestling match are doing considerable training and a moderate amount of boasting, which indicates that the one that goes down will fall hard.

AT FORT THOMAS.

The moonlight lies softly upon beautiful Fort Thomas, lending a mystic and enchanting charm to the picturesque beauty.

The shadows cast by the thick foliage of late summer are mysterious and alluring, the tall elm trees lean toward each other and whisper softly and joyously together, and the huge gray water tower stands like a faithful sentinel, mutely calling out to each passerby: "Halt! Who goes there?"

Far out past the barracks, in the open country, under the white light of the harvest moon, lies a tiny white city—the camp of the Sixth and of the immunes. The noise and activity of the day are succeeded by the rest which comes with the starlight. The sentinels pace their silent beats and think with a thrill of joy that this is home. The mellow notes of a distant bugle sound through the stillness of the night. "Taps" is sounded, and all is quiet again.

Over and above all the rugged water tower keeps silent watch—a sentry who never sleeps, a soldier always on duty.

He hears the whispering elm trees and knows what they are saying. His heart is keenly sensitive, he has heard so much said concerning the subject which is most closely connected with his dearest hope, his wildest, fondest ambition. People had not seemed to consider his feelings. Perhaps they thought he hadn't any, for they had stood before him and critically discussed the details of the project which meant to him life, or—no, not death, for he was too strong to die—but mere existence contrasted with a career crowned with honor and glory. His strong nature quivered at the thought that he must see this opportunity pass him.

"It's sad, isn't it?" one of the elm trees was saying. "He wants it so much, and it seems as if he ought to have it. How I hope he will!"

"Yes," said the other, "but they say that there are so many details to take into consideration, and then things of this sort always move slowly, you know. That fine old fellow deserves it, and I believe he will get it yet."

When the water tower heard this, he couldn't keep still any longer. He felt the way one does whose heart and soul are bent toward accomplishing some dearly prized object and who has fought his way to it through many difficulties and discouragements. To such a one a word of sympathy, an expression of kindly interest, comes with the penetrating force of the warm sunshine which thaws the frozen mountain sides into countless hundreds of trickling little brooks.

He looked over at the elm trees and said gently: "You will pardon me, I know, but I couldn't help overhearing what you were saying just now, and I want to tell you just how it all seems to me.

"You may think it is presumptuous of me to want to wear a memorial of the Sixth, and maybe it is, but I can't help it. I do want it, and I want it more than I've ever wanted anything in my whole life. What makes me feel blue about it sometimes isn't so much because I'm afraid they're not going to let me wear it, but because I'm afraid they're not going to put it any place, and that would be awful, for the Sixth should have a memorial if ever a regiment—yes, or a hero—had one. I hear they are having trouble getting enough subscriptions for it, and that's what hurts me. I should think any one would be glad to give something to it. They would if they knew all that I do.

"But, then," he continued, "as I said before, I want to be the one to wear it. I've been here so long, you see, that I feel as if I belonged to the Sixth as much as any enlisted man. I've lived here with them all these years. I've watched them drill and guard and live the soldier life they love until I feel as if I was one of them. I've seen them work and I've seen them play, and I got so I loved them all. I know all the officers too. I've watched them going and coming all these years, sometimes happy and sometimes worried, but always gallant soldiers. I've seen them get on and off the cars here with their wives and children and sweethearts laughing and talking and having good times, and I don't think they ever realized how fond I am of them all and how I notice all the little things they do.

"When summers came, the regiment would march off to encampments, and after a few months they would come back healthy and brown and glad to get home again. Some of them said I was the first thing about the post that they saw on their way back and that I meant home to them.

"Then last spring, when the war broke out, they went again. You remember that day—when they marched out. I could tell you of things I saw that day and the days and nights before that—'goodbys' that turned out to be real farewells, of promises and prayers that were as sad as they were serious. Their faces had a different look that day. I remember it well.

"I used to think of them in Florida and Cuba and wonder what they were doing. I used to wonder how they would act in a real battle—most of the men had never seen real service—and then when I heard about the fevers and diseases of that country, although it wasn't very patriotic, I suppose, I wanted them back again safe at the post.

"You know what their record was in battle and in camp—I was proud, I can tell you, when I heard it—and you remember the night they came back! I had not thought it would be so sad—there were so few! And the officers—I had heard their families talk of them during their absence—and, too, I knew they weren't all coming, but I didn't realize it until I saw the regiment without them!

"Well," he said sadly, "maybe I'm not going to be the one to have this honor, but it seems to me if I did—if they would only get a memorial to the Sixth and let me wear it—I couldn't let them know it, but I'd be the proudest, happiest person at the post, and I believe the boys who were left down there in Cuba would like it too."

The elm trees were silent in the sincerity of their sympathy.

The soft, white moonlight pervaded the place like a tender benediction.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Audacity That Won.

"There is a sort of audacity," says a woman in the Chicago Inter Ocean, "which is almost admirable. I really felt provoked when the conductor on a North Side car persistently carried me two blocks beyond my destination, especially as I had been energetically signaling him for several minutes.

"'Why did you not stop when you saw me waving my hand?' I demanded. The conductor (he was young, good looking and Irish) bowed low in contrition.

"'But, upon me honor, ma'am, I thought yo was throwing me a kiss,' he said."

RIDICULOUS.

Glenville road was situated in the most fashionable part of a pretty London suburb and boasted of a number of small and large houses, all of different ages and architecture, which came as a welcome relief after the rows and rows of modestly constructed dwelling houses so frequently seen.

At 8 Glenville road, a large, squarely built, house of somewhat ancient appearance lived an elderly widow, her two sons and her niece, the latter of whom had been engaged to the elder son, Edwin, for the last ten years, and who seemed as near her wedding day at the time of her betrothal as at the time our story opens.

But Miss Lancaster was seemingly content with life, until the little cottage on the opposite side of the road at last secured a tenant, a circumstance which Mr. Edwin seemed to take an extraordinary interest in since the tenant was a remarkably prepossessing little woman—a widow, rich in the possession of a small annual income and a very pretty face.

The wedding day seemed further off than ever after the little widow had resided in Glenville road for the space of six weeks, and one day after peeping through the blinds and seeing the fickle couple going off together to some place of amusement, Miss Lancaster gave way to grief and was found by her younger cousin, Herbert, sobbing as if her heart would break on the sofa.

"What's up, Belle?" said he anxiously. "You haven't been yourself for some time. What's troubling you?"

And Miss Lancaster's pride, which had been dissolved in her tears, gave way altogether, and she confided her woes to her sympathetic listener and asked his advice as to whether she should give his brother his freedom.

"Nonsense," said Herbert warmly. "Ted's all right. It's the woman's fault. You know men are very susceptible to pretty women who run after them. He's lots fonder of you."

"Do you think so?" said Belle, drying her eyes and looking up brightly. "She is so much younger and prettier than I—I was afraid."

"Don't you worry yourself about that," returned her cousin kindly. "Do you suppose Grace is jealous of every pretty woman I speak to?"

"But you are not engaged to Grace."

"Oh, but I shall be if she'll have me, and now cheer up, old girl. Fretting was never a beautifier of the complexion, you know."

That evening Herbert made up his mind to interfere for the first time in other people's business. Edward was going a bit too far, and the affair must be stopped. He mused for a long time on the best manner of doing it, and at last decided that the wisest thing to do was to make love to the widow himself, even at the risk of offending the young lady he had set his affections upon.

And he did, too, and found making love to the widow a very easy and pleasant undertaking. Nearly every evening was spent at the cottage, and the little widow, delighted at her new conquest, became so cold about her former one that success for his scheme was promised from the first. She was so pretty and had such winning manners that before long the younger brother began to excuse the elder for his infatuation and feel sorry for him and his unfortunate engagement.

One afternoon, after escorting the widow home from a walk, Herbert thought of Grace with a pang of dutiful reproach and, getting on his bicycle, rode off whistling to call upon her.

When he arrived at the house he found Grace very chatty and cordial, but with an entirely different manner about her which profoundly puzzled him until he caught the sparkle of a ring upon her finger.

"You will be pleased, I know, to hear that I am engaged," she said half shyly. "And I am sure you will be able to congratulate, since you intend to commit matrimony yourself."

"I!" gasped Herbert in astonishment.

"Oh, yes; don't pretend not to understand. I have heard all about that fascinating little widow that lives opposite to you, and I am sure I hope you will be very happy indeed."

She talked a lot about her coming marriage and her fiance, and Herbert sat and listened in a dazed kind of manner until the appearance of the newly elected bridegroom woke him up to the fact that his presence was not exactly required. On his way home he met his brother and cousin starting out for a walk.

"Congratulations!" shouted Edwin like a lunatic, pulling him off his bicycle. "Oh, you artful man!" said Belle, turning up her eyes. "No wonder you were so ready to"— But she stopped suddenly and looked up at Edwin in confusion.

"What is the meaning of all this?" said the cyclist angrily.

"Why, we have just heard of Grace's engagement and that you are bent on following suit. We met Mrs. Law"—

"You don't mean to say," gasped Herbert, "you said anything to her about"—

"We did, indeed," said Belle, "and she looked so pleased."

And Herbert inwardly groaned, and, without further remark rode off home for all he was worth. But when he reached Glenville road he was so absentminded that he wheeled his bicycle straight up to the cottage and before he knew what he was doing found himself in the back garden of the widow's snug little home.

Strangely enough, there was Mrs. Lawrence sitting upon the garden seat and looking so youthful and charming that he felt quite confused at his audacity and nervously accepted her invitation to sit down.

"I came," he began, "to make a clean breast of everything to you. I haven't treated you fairly, Mrs. Lawrence. I"—

"Dear, dear!" said the little widow, brightly. "What's all this about? You haven't anything to reproach yourself about. Don't you suppose I know perfectly well why you have made yourself so amiable to me all along?"

"How you must despise me!" groaned Herbert.

"Not at all," smiled Mrs. Lawrence. "I admired you for it. You did it for that other woman's sake, and a disinterested motive is always a commendable one."

"Do you know what people are saying of us?" said Herbert regretfully.

"No—what?" asked the widow in innocent wonder.

"That we are engaged to be married."

"How absurd!" said the widow faintly.

"Is it so very absurd?" demanded the young man. "Is it, Blanche?"

"Ridiculous!" said the little widow as her head fell gently upon his shoulder.—Cincinnati Herald.

SECOND THOUGHT.

Arthur Rayburn had taken a long walk alone that afternoon, along by the seaside. He had watched the last preparations for the sailing of the Whirlpool for Liberia. As he had watched a sudden thought had suggested itself to him. He had stood still a moment apparently in hesitation. Then the strange, wild, impulse had seemed to take complete possession of him. He walked quickly to where the sailors were at work.

"At what time does this boat set sail?" he inquired.

"The last boat goes out to the ship at 11 tonight," replied a sailor, and with a determined expression on his face the young man turned away and walked quickly homeward.

In that quaint little seaboard city Arthur Rayburn had lived since childhood. There, too, had lived Norma Burton, and there together they had passed the happiest years of their lives. Arthur had loved Norma; he had loved the sleepy little city; he had been in love with life. Then there had come a change. Three years before Norma Burton had moved away. Instantly all was changed. The bright days grew gray. Even the old town was not what it had been. Arthur Rayburn became sick of it—of its dead level monotony. He longed to go away, to leave it forever behind him.

But all this was before her return. A month ago she had come back for a visit with her sister. Norma Burton had come back, and, lo, the sleepy little city, the town that had been so unbearably dull had undergone another change! Again it was bright and wholesome and sunny. Again Arthur Rayburn loved the city of his birth.—Again he was in love with life. He understood it all. He had thought it all over, and that afternoon in his lonely walk by the seashore he had come to a conclusion.

That evening he waited for Norma in his father's library. He had asked her to meet him there, and she had promised to do so. As he waited he more than once glanced anxiously at the clock. He knew she would keep her appointment, but time was precious. At last he heard a light step in the hall and opened the door. She entered, and he closed the door behind her.

No wonder the old town had changed with her coming and going! She was all brightness, all gladness, all warmth.

"Norma," he said earnestly, "I have asked you to come here for a special reason."

She was about to make some light reply, but glancing up at him she caught the tense expression of his face. She was sobered in an instant. A quick tumult in her heart foretold the crisis approaching.

"Don't, Arthur!" she exclaimed in a tone that was almost pleading.

"I must," he returned desperately. "I suppose I know your answer without asking, but I feel that I must hear it from your own lips. I love you, dearest, and I ask you to be my wife. Think a moment O Norma—I know you do not care for me as I care for you, but can't you learn to love me?" There was intense emotion in his voice, and Arthur could see that she was deeply moved. Her face turned pale as he was speaking, and he knew that she was suffering. He hated himself for hurting her, but he waited for her to speak.

"I know—I was afraid," she began, falteringly. Then, looking straight into his eyes, she continued: "I love you as the friend of my childhood, Arthur. I cannot honestly say more." A sudden wave of tenderness came over her, and she added, "You know I would if I could!"

In spite of his pain, Arthur Rayburn smiled.

"Yes, dear," he said, touched by her sympathy, "I believe you would if you could."

There was a moment's silence; then Arthur spoke again.

"I am going away, Norma," he said. "I am going to sail on the Whirlpool. I shall probably never see you again, but I shall always prize your friendship and shall always wish for your happiness." He tried to smile bravely as he added, "And I believe I shall always be glad to remember that you would have loved me if you could."

He opened the door for her. She looked up at him through tears, and he bent and kissed her forehead. Then he closed the door behind her. He listened to her footsteps as she passed along the hall, and he sat down at his father's desk and wrote steadily for a long time.

Suddenly he stopped writing and sat for a moment as though lost in thought. After a time he rose and walked to the window that looked out upon the harbor. For some moments he stood gazing out into the starry darkness. When he turned away from the window a new light shone in his eyes and there was a determined expression about his mouth.

"No, sir!" he said as though addressing some one. "No, sir, I will never skulk away and hide myself like a miserable coward! She respects me—at least. I will be worthy of her respect."

Walking steadily to the desk, he gathered up the letters he had written and tossed them into the open grate. The clock struck 10.

He sank into a great chair before the fire, and for a long time sat buried in thought. He reviewed his past, a past which, taken as a whole, had not been unhappy. He dwelt longest on those years when Norma had been with him, when they had enjoyed life, as children, together. Then he thought of the future, and involuntarily glanced at the clock. It was not yet too late, but he made no move. He had put his hand to the plow and had no intention of turning back. He would hold on, however hard the way appeared before him.

At that moment he heard a light step in the hall. Before he could reach the door it opened softly, and a second later the girl he loved was in his arms.

It was he who first broke the long silence.

"You are crying, dearest," he said gently.

"I was afraid," she faltered through her tears, "afraid you had sailed on the Whirlpool."

"No, Norma," he said. "On sober second thought I changed my mind, and I am glad it was in time."—Annie R. Young in Boston Post.

The Case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs.

J. E. & B. E. BURKEE

Postponed Until Monday, March 27.

Testimony in the case of Finch, Van Slyck, Young & Co. vs. John E. and Bowre E. Burkee, copartners as Burkee Bros., was taken last Thursday afternoon in the office of Attorney Lee before the referee, Court Stenographer Strawbridge. The first named firm holds a judgment against the latter, and it was with a view of securing the payment for the same that the suit was begun. H. W. Lee appeared for the plaintiffs and Ira C. Richardson for the defendants. The testimony showed that in the fall of 1882 the defendants formed a partnership and conducted a general store at St. Hilaire. B. E. Burkee put $1,700 into the enterprise and J. E. Burkee put $200 and a farm in Wisconsin. J. E. Burkee's wife also put $800 into the store, and an uncle, John Bergoust, also was interested in the firm, but withdrew subsequent to the failure and took a mortgage of $2,500 upon the store building. A house and lot was also sold for $500 and the money was paid to Bergoust. The firm was closed up by a St. Paul attorney, and the stock was disposed of to E. M. Hoff for $300. The firm's liabilities at that time were about $5,000, although they have no books or accounts to show the exact amount. Mr. Hoff continued the business from that time on, and both of the Burkees worked for him and received $50 per month for about a year and a half. J. E. Burkee then came to Thief River Falls and went to work for Hans Langseth as a clerk at $60 per month. The books showed that his wages were credited each year to his wife, who also was advancing money at different times to Mr. Langseth on which he paid interest at the rate of ten per cent. Two clerks also boarded with the Burkees at $24 per month. On the 8th day of January, 1895, a written agreement was drawn up between Hans Langseth and Mary Burkee, John Burkee's wife, and the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed, each being a half owner in the concern. The books Jan. 8, 1895 showed that Hans Langseth owed to Mary Burkee the sum of $3,230.85, which was turned in as her half. John Burkee's wages, which had been placed at the credit of Mrs. Burkee, amounted to $2,400, and the board amounted to $816, or a total of $3,216.

Mr. Langseth testified that at the time the firm of Hans Langseth & Co. was formed the stock was valued at $7,000, and that he owed $7,000; that he could not pay Mary Burkee the $3,230.85 which he owed to her, nor could he afford to continue to pay J. E. Burkee $60 per month and so he gave her a half interest in a business which had assets of $7,000 and liabilities of $7,000. The store building and the outstanding accounts, he said, belonged to him. The farm, on which they still owe $2,500, belonged to the firm. Mr. Langseth stated that the profits of the firm for the best year since 1895 was, as shown by the books, $3,500; that the poorest year showed a loss of $2,000; that the books showed that since 1895 they had made the sum of $5,000, but that he did not think it would amount to that much when it was taken into consideration that there were some bad debts outstanding and that there had been a shrinkage in values of merchandise, in fact, he said, we stand about where we were in '95. Mr. Langseth said that Mr. Burkee took an active interest in the store, but not on his own behalf as he was there simply as the agent of his wife, Mary Burkee, and that he was not paid any salary. Asked if J. E. Burkee even received any money, he said that he did at different times and it was charged up to Mary.

J. E. Burkee testified that he took an active interest in business of Hans Langseth & Co., for "why shouldn't I," he said, "I am a hired man there." Witness also said that he had not received any pay since 1895, but that he was drawing about $700 per year out of the business with which to support his family. Mr. Burkee also tried to solicit the sympathy of the court by saying that his health was very poor; that he had paid out considerable in doctor bills for himself and family, and that he was paying his debts as fast as he could.

J. E. Burkee testified that he had worked for E. M. Hoff practically ever since the failure, that for the first year and a half he received $50 per month, the next three months $45 per month, and that since then he had worked without any stated salary per month and did not know how much he was receiving; that he was living in the rear of the store building owned by Burkee Bros. and that he paid no rent; that it cost him from $35 to $40 per month to live, and that he would sell all of the furniture in his house for $25. He said he had collected rent for the store building when it was occupied and used the money to pay the taxes and interest on the mortgage.

An adjournment was taken until Monday, March 27, at which time additional testimony will be taken, and then the matter will be submitted to Judge Watts.

Athletic Club Wrestlers.

A fair sized crowd was at the Athletic club hall last Saturday evening to witness two wrestling contests. Dellos Douglas was to throw Dave Benzie three times inside of thirty minutes, and at the beginning it looked as if he would be successful. He threw Benzie twice in 3½ minutes, but in the third round Benzie got a chock hold upon him and won.

The next contest was between Isedor Lewin and Fred Miller, and the latter succeeded in throwing the former after a hard fought battle.

FOR HONOR

For Blood and a Good Sized Purse.

Saturday evening, March 11, is the date now fixed for the much talked of wrestling match between Harry G. Dobner and Sam Bardelson. The event is to take place in Hamre's hall and it will be under the management of Chas. Hoar, who has had posters printed saying that the match will be for blood—and a good sized purse. Both of the gentlemen who will participate in the wrestling match are doing considerable training and a moderate amount of boasting, which indicates that the one that goes down will fall hard.

Successful Operation

An operation was performed last week by Dr. Dunlop, assisted by Dr. Watson, of Red Lake Falls, upon a son of Sibley La Bree, of Thief River Falls, who was brought to Crookston for that purpose, for a case of spinal byphides. It is a rare case and the operation was successful, the patient resting easy and the case progressing along expected lines.—Crookston Times.

A Card Party.

Mrs. C. J. Knox entertained a company of friends at cards for Miss Bessie Bailey last Thursday evening. Those present were Messrs. Dobner, Lewin, Curran, Allen and Wm. Benzie and Wallin, Misses Kratka, Wallin, McDonald, Curran and Mrs. Stranahan.

The Roseau Times is of the opinion that Halvor Steenerson will be the next congressman from the Seventh district in the event of Congressmen Eddy securing the nomination for governor. Mr. Steenerson is the choice of the northern portion of the district.

Senator Davis, in his address at Chicago said: "I do not believe that in all the long and illustrious rule of the men who have filled that exalted chair there has been any man who has gone through processes and situations of more difficulty, testing like the judgment and conscience, with more success and greater acceptability to the people of the United States than President McKinley. It is worth all that this war has cost that the hateful line between the north and the south has been entirely and forever obliterated; that a condition of sentiment and feeling has been brought about by the fusion of an all-embracing patriotism, where those who have fought for the stars and bars now fight and have fought under the stars and stripes; where the grandson of General Grant serves on the staff of the nephew of Lee; where Joseph Wheeler leads the forces of the United States to victory against the walls of Santiago."

Prof. Henry A Rowland, of Johns Hopkins university, by a recent invention has simplified the art of telegraphy so that it is no longer necessary for operators to learn the Morse system. Any one who can work a typewriter can send a dispatch. His apparatus, which is now in use by the Pennsylvania railroad telegraph department, was made at Johns Hopkins university by an ordinary modelmaker, and is subject to considerable improvement, but operates without difficulty and is in use daily. Ordinary typewriter machines are attached to the wire, and by striking the keys of one it is possible to print the dispatch by letters upon the other machine, 1,500 miles away, just as clearly as if the paper was placed in the sending machine. It is claimed that eight messages can be sent over the same wire at the same time, four in each direction, and that neither interferes with the others. It is further claimed that one operator, by the automatic apparatus, can send and receive without assistance. It is only necessary to have an attendant to take out the sheets or cut off the tape when the message is completed.

Sam Cheely, the taxidermist, is better prepared than ever to do all kinds of mounting and trimming heads of animals. Work guaranteed to give satisfaction.

'TWAS FINE

The Dance and Banquet Given by the Firemen.

The fifth anniversary of the organization of the Thief River Falls Fire Department was very fittingly observed last night by one of the largest assemblage of people ever witnessed in Thief River Falls. Hamre's hall was taxed to its utmost and everyone seemed to greatly enjoy the dancing and an excellent program was rendered. Music was furnished by Prof. St. Julicen, of Crookston, and nothing was left undone to mar the pleasure of the evening.

At 10:30 supper was served in the Ogahmah hotel, and it was one of the most delightful spreads ever placed before a Thief River Falls public. Landlord Robbecke did himself proud, and completely satisfied the innermen with his many tempting dishes. There were in attendance about 188 couples.

The question arises, what's the matter with St. Hilaire?

Another Fire.

Red Lake Falls, March 6.—Fire was discovered Sunday morning in the Horwitz Bros. new store building which is only partially completed. The hour was 2 a. m. and a brisk wind was blowing, which tried the mettle of the fire department. The flames were subdued by heroic work, and the damage held down to a loss of $150, which is covered by a mechanic's risk. This firm was burned out last November. If the fire had not yielded to the control of the department, the entire east side of the business block of the city would have been destroyed.

A Big Load of Logs.

Joe De Camp returned yesterday from Red Lake where he had been with a load of supplies for P. & J. Meehan. Joe reports that they are doing business up in the pine country at a lively rate. At Percy Vilbert's camp on March 6, a load of logs containing 14,980 feet was drawn for three miles by one of P. & J. Meehan's teams. Pet Trudell was the teamster. This is a very big load, but they claim that bigger ones will be hauled before spring.

The following, from the Jackson Pilot, is worth preserving: When a splinter has been driven deep into a child's hand, it can be extracted by steam. Nearly fill a wide mouthed bottle with very hot water; place the injured part over the mouth and press it tightly. The suction thus produced will draw the flesh down, and in a minute or two the steam will extract the splinter and inflamation together.

The Brainerd & Northern railroad started out a crew of surveyors on Tuesday morning to look out a route from Lake Bemidji to Gull Lake for an extention of their line northeastward from here. They found a very fair route, but are having a little trouble getting over the divide. GOOD WORK

By the Firemen Saved Schuster's Livery Stable.

Fire broke out in the livery stable of Chas. Schuster Tuesday evening at 10:30, and by prompt action the fire department succeeded in saving the building. The fire was discovered by George Williams who at once gave the alarm and a large number of men who were about town succeeded in taking out the horses, harnesses, buggies, etc., before water was turned on. The origin of the fire is a mystery. Mr. Schuster left the barn at 9 o'clock and was at home when the fire broke out. When he left everything was in good order. The damage to the barn is about $100, and Mr. Schuster was so unfortunate as not to have any insurance.

A petition was circulated among the firemen yesterday asking that John Mickleson be removed from the office of city engineer and that a man to be selected by the firemen to serve in his place. At the fire Tuesday night, it is alleged, things were not in good order at the engine house and that owing to this fact steam could not be gotten up as quickly as it should.

PLAYING THE GAME.

"And I really think," said Mrs. Merriman, "it was more than one of my ordinary inspirations."

"Really?" said I.

"Yes; it was genius. I'll tell you about it.

"Laura was staying here. She wasn't by way of being actually engaged, you know—one of that unsatisfactory sort of half and half things. He's a nice boy, quite a nice boy, but he had a gay little way, like the Tomtit, you know.

"Laura was here such time. They wrote to each other, more often than not, as Tomtit would say.

"Then for a few days she looked 'mopy,' and was for her quite cross. She came to me, and by degrees began a long rigmarole. He was this and he was that. He was writing horrid, short letters. Of course she didn't care. It wasn't that. Only he wasn't to think he could behave as he chose.

"He was staying in a house full of people. He had himself said there were some nice girls there, and this was the apex of the whole matter; he was going next week to another house, to which her twin sister had been asked and not she.

"'Your twin sister's pretty, isn't she?'

"'I don't know,' snappily. 'We were supposed to be exactly alike. Only she wears a fringe and has darker eyebrows. Yes; she is pretty.'

"Then came a sudden burst of confidence.

"'Dear Mrs. Merriman, I'm—I'm afraid he'll think she's prettier than I am!'

"'But surely he has seen her before?'

"'No; that's just it. He hasn't. She's been abroad a great deal. I never met him till this summer, you know.'

"'Stop!' I said authoritatively (I really couldn't bear any more confidences, especially secondhand ones).—'Stop! I have a magnificent idea. Come up to my room and let me cut you a fringe.'

"'What on earth do you mean?' said Laura blankly.

"'What I say. Come up at once.' She came, and I cut it.

"'It is a great improvement,' she said as she twisted up her hair. 'I shall write and tell him.'

"'No you won't,' I said. 'You little blind idiot! Don't you understand? Now, tell me, how much would it take to keep Norah away from the Chamberlaynes'?'

"Laura's jaw dropped.

"'To keep away? Oh, I couldn't do that. It's—it's not what the boys call "playing the game." Besides, it would upset the Chamberlaynes' plans.'

"'How if you went instead of her?'

"Laura's head went up.

"'Thank you! I have more pride than to force myself'— She suddenly stopped. She had caught sight of herself in the glass. She laughed, picked up a hand glass and turned slowly round.

"'Could she be bribed with a hat?' I said with a businesslike air, 'a Paris hat?'

"'I—I think a London one would do. You see, George Marten will be at the rectory'— She took a burned match and began darkening her eyebrows.

"I struck while the iron was hot. 'Write at once to Norah and settle everything,' I said briskly. 'Go home a day or two earlier (I shall be sorry to lose you, dear, but this is important). Borrow a respectable amount of Norah's things and appear at the Chamberlaynes' as Miss N. Stafford.'"

Two days later:

MY DEAREST MRS. MERRIMAN—I have come, and so has he. I nearly fainted. He doesn't guess. He talked to me all the evening about me—Laura! 'Twas magnificent. No time for more. He never looks at the other girls. Yours devotedly, LAURA.

Next day:

DEAR MRS. MERRIMAN—You will be surprised to learn that I leave here tomorrow morning. I would have left tonight, only there is not a train. It is all over. He has been saying such things. To think he ever could look at any one in exactly the same way he used to look at me! I wish I was dead! I told him today I was going to tell Laura. He said, "Oh, no, you won't!" I hate him! I wonder I kept up, but I did. How could I ever have liked him the least little bit? I am feeling very ill. Yours, L. STAFFORD.

Next morning:

MY DEAREST DARLING MRS. MERRIMAN—Will you believe it? It is all right. He knew all along. How could he? He said he knew when he heard me sneeze, as I did when I arrived at that horrid, drafty station—I mean, dear drafty station! He knows my sneeze in a million. He says he could hardly bear to keep it up, only I was so sweet. I tell him he was most cruel and unkind. He says it was a wicked idea, and whoever put it into my head ought to be cut! He says he cares for no one else in the whole wide world, and he doesn't like fringes, so he can't like Norah when he sees her. Dear Norah! Just fancy! She is going to marry George Marten! Isn't it odd? Your most devoted and grateful LAURA.

Mrs. Merriman put the letters away and laughed.

"That was genius," said she.

"No it wasn't," said I.—Ladies' Realm.

The Chinamen We Meet.

Comparatively few Chinamen of the class we see here are able to read, and I will venture the assertion that there are not over half a dozen in all New Orleans who possess that accomplishment. I know one who reads Chinese with tolerable fluency, and he is in great demand among the balance of the colony to decipher letters and papers. Because a laundryman is able to dash off a few hieroglyphics as a receipt for one's washing is no indication that he could read ten consecutive lines of a native book or periodical. What he writes is merely a numeral or two by which he distinguishes the package, and that much is very easily learned. Any bright American can pick it up in a few weeks.

Most of the Chinese, however, are natural mathematicians, and perform astounding calculations on a sort of abacus or wired frame, strung with buttons. They shift the buttons to and fro and give correct answers to the most intricate arithmetical problems in less time than it takes to tell about it. I have often tried to learn the secret, but was never able to master it. The thing is based on a series of logarithms, but they are entirely too esoteric for me to grasp.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Hyenal Altar.

In the gardens of the Zoological society a couple were standing before the cage of the hyenas, while the man was commenting upon the habits of the beast for the benefit of the woman who hung to his arm. Inspired by the knowledge and eloquence of her swain, the young woman began to rack her brains for original ideas with which to confront him. Presently one—the natural feminine idea—came. "Bill," she exclaimed, "what 'ave these 'ere to do with marriage?" "Why, naught, you silly," retorted Bill impolitely. "They 'ave," she returned triumphantly. "When a couple are bein spliced, we 'ears 'em talk of the hyenal altar."—Cornhill Magazine.

HOME TINKERING.

How to Mend Granite Ware Cooking Utensils.

It sometimes happens that a granite saucepan or chafing dish gets a fall, and in this fall a bit of the granite enamel is loosened and finally peels off. The dish is of little value, for a hole will soon ensue. Granite is supposed to be unmendable, but we have proved that it can be mended. If the granite is not weakened all around the hole a copper rivet, such as are used by harness makers, may be used to fill up the break. There are different sizes of the rivets, and they come with a small head, something like carpet tacks. The rivet proper is slipped through the hole in the granite and then over the end that passes through is slipped a copper washer (which comes with the rivet), then with a few taps of a tack hammer the rivet is flattened down on the washer. This effectually mends the break in the granite and makes it practically as good as now.

If only a very small hole is found, a bit of copper wire is used to mend it. The wire is slipped through the hole, after being cut the right length, and then with a tack hammer it is flattened on both sides of the granite vessel which is being operated upon.

The process is so simple that even a woman who is doing light housekeeping need not fear to undertake it, providing she can strike a straight blow with a hammer, which women are not supposed capable of doing. Though it may be among the new women, there may be found a few who can do this. The only thing to be avoided is striking promiscuously upon the granite surface and so scaling more of the enamel off.

The mending is almost as simple as the old method of putting a rag into a hole to mend it.

How to Test Flour.

When flour is genuine or of the best kind, it holds together in a mass when squeezed by the hand and shows the impression of the fingers and even of the marks of the skin much longer than when it is bad or adulterated, and the dough made with it is very gluey and elastic, easy to be kneaded and may be elongated, flattened and drawn in every direction without breaking.

How to Wash Quilts.

Quilts require washing frequently to keep them clean, but that is not a difficult task when one has a good machine and wringer. Put one or two quilts (owing to the size) in the machine, heat enough water to cover them and add enough pearline to make a good suds. When it is dissolved, pour the water over the quilts and rub them well. If one suds is not enough to remove the dirt, use two, preparing the second water just as you did the first. Pass them through the wringer and rinse them in two or three waters, putting a little bluing in the last. Hang them on a strong line, folding one edge over just enough to hold it and putting a clothespin every 10 or 12 inches.

How to Cook Sweetbreads.

Sweetbreads, tablespoonful butter, salt, salt pork (strips). Sweetbreads should be well washed and dried. Run the pork in with a needle. Put the butter into the chafing dish, and when hot lay in the sweetbreads; salt and cook. Turn often to crisp the pork.

How to Clean a Piano.

To clean a piano use warm water, a cake of soap and a flannel rag. Take the piece of cloth and wet it. Then rub it over the cake of soap and apply it to the piano, a small portion of the surface at a time. Next wet the second piece, and with this rub off the soap as thoroughly as possible. With the third piece, dry the part, rubbing it till it shines brightly, and do it all as quickly as possible, that the soap may not remain too long upon the polished surface. If one is very sure to get a thin, cheap quality of canton flannel and is careful to follow directions as here given to them, success is certain.

How to Prevent Loss of Hair.

The best means to prevent loss of hair, when it shows a tendency to fall out, is to cut it short and then shampoo the scalp two or three times a day with cold water, dipping the tips of the fingers in ice water, then rubbing the scalp till red.

How to Make Lip Salve.

There are many harmless, healing salves that can be used on the lips. Like all other remedies, some are more suitable to one kind of lips than to others. Dry lips want one kind of remedy, while very moist lips require quite another kind of treatment. A very nice ointment for the lips can be made of five parts of olive oil to one part of pure white wax, which must be heated over the fire in a porcelain lined pan. A few drops of tincture of benzoin can be added if wished.

How to Make Oatmeal Balls.

Two cups of cold, cooked oatmeal, one beaten egg, one cup cracker crumbs, one scant cup of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix all well together, form into small cakes and fry in smoking fat. Serve with hot maple sirup.

How to Make Chestnut Cream.

Boil 50 chestnuts and remove the skins and inner rinds. Simmer the nuts again in one quart of milk and water till they become like floury potatoes. Drain the liquid away and bruise the nuts in a basin with one tablespoonful of powdered white sugar. Rub the flour through a coarse sieve, mix half a pint of sweetened cream with it and pour into a fancy shaped mold. Freeze and turn out before serving.

How to Select Wall Paper.

It is well to remember when papering a small room that blue in all light shades makes a room look larger. Dark colors or papers with large patterns have the opposite effect.

THE WEEKLY WASHING.

How to Secure Good Results and Save Wear and Tear.

Remove the stains from table linen or other white goods before putting them in the wash water, says New York Voice. Tea and coffee stains can usually be rinsed out in clear cold water. Apple, peach and other fruit stains are harder to deal with, but will yield to the influence of a solution of chloride of lime which is made by dissolving a tablespoonful of lime in a little boiling water, then straining through a cloth into half a gallon of cold water. Keep it in a jug, tightly corked, until it is needed. Soak the stains in this solution until they disappear, then rinse in clear water. It is a good plan to mend any rent in the clothing before washing, as the worn places always become larger during the laundering process.

If you have not a cistern that furnishes plenty of clear soft water, you can "break" hard water and make it just as good by dissolving borax in it. The amount required cannot be determined except by trying it, as it varies with different kinds of water. Borax used in any water makes the clothes easier to wash and saves more than its cost by lessening the amount of soap needed, and nothing else leaves the muslin and linen garments so beautifully white and clean. Borax is excellent for colored clothes also, for, unlike many washing powders, it cleanses the fabric without fading the most delicate colors or rotting the goods.

Soaking the white clothes all night will loosen the dirt and make them easier to wash. Get everything ready to begin early in the morning, and a long washing can usually be finished before the work of preparing dinner will require the attention. Make a panful of good starch, putting a teaspoonful of powdered borax dissolved in water into half a gallon of starch. This makes it smooth and glossy and keeps it from sticking to the irons. Starch all the garments that need it, except the white shirts, collars and cuffs, as soon as they come from the rinse water. This is a much easier way than to dry them first and then starch them. Table linen requires very little, if any, starch. Hang colored clothes in the shade, as the bright sunshine fades them. Everything should be taken from the line as soon as it is dry, for a few hours' whipping in the wind wears them out more than wearing them a week.

How to Jelly Chicken.

Boil until tender in enough water to cover one chicken. Remove when done and let water boil down to one quart. Cut the meat into small pieces. To the water add three-quarters box gelatin, soaked, one tablespoonful Worcestershire sauce and salt and pepper to taste. Slice one hard boiled egg, add to the chicken, pour over it the strained liquor. Mix well and put into square mold. Set in cool place to harden.

How to Have Healthy Skin.

The objection to the use of wool next to the skin is that in many cases it excites the skin to an excessive degree of activity, producing moisture, which is absorbed and retained by the woolen fabric, which, thus moistened, acts as a sort of poultice and relaxes and debilitates the skin. Linen absorbs the moisture at once and passes it on to the outer garments, from which it is evaporated. Woolen underclothing, in other words, causes abnormal activity of the skin, thus becoming moist and remaining moist, whereas linen garments do not thus excite the skin, and if moistened by perspiration quickly dry, thus avoiding both undue excitement and undue exposure.—New York Voice.

How to Escalop Potatoes.

Pare and slice potatoes thin. Butter an earthen pudding dish, put in a layer of potatoes and season with salt, pepper, butter and a little finely minced onion, sprinkle with a little flour and add another layer of potato; continue until the dish is full and pour a cupful of milk over all. Bake three-quarters of an hour.

How to Clean Silver.

To keep silver in perfect condition it should be well-washed and rubbed after every time of using. Perfectly clean hot water must be provided and plenty of soap used. A small mop will be found better than a cloth to wash it with, as the water must be almost too hot to bear the hands in. It should be dried at once with a perfectly dry towel, and all the appliances for silver cleaning should be kept in a box or drawer by themselves and the wash leathers never allowed to become dirty, but washed often and properly dried. Plate brushes must be of the very best quality and be used with care, or they may scratch the silver.

How to Make Cheese Balls.

Blend one cake of Neufchatel cheese with two tablespoonfuls of whipped cream, the same measure of chopped almonds and a tablespoonful of minced parsley or cress. Dip butter paddles into ice water and mold the cheese into balls the size of an ordinary hickory nut. Serve with the pie.

How to Make Barley Broth.

An excellent and nutritious dish for an invalid is barley broth made as follows: Boil for three hours one pound of the neck of mutton with two ounces of pearl barley. Cover with three pints of water and let it reduce to a pint. Remove the meat and press the soup and barley through a sieve. Salt it very slightly and serve hot. It should be as thick as cream. Only a few teaspoonfuls need be taken at one time, as it is very nourishing.

How to Make Glue Floor Paint.

Dissolve two ounces of glue in two quarts of boiling water, then add three pounds of ocher yellow paint, to be kept warm while using. When dry, apply one coat of boiled linseed oil. In warm weather it will set in a short time so the floor can be used in a few hours.

DOBNER WON

He Threw the Sammy Starsandstripes Twice.

About 200 people were present at Hamre's hall last Saturday evening to witness a programme which had been prepared by the Athletic Club. It consisted of three wrestling matches and several sparing exhibitions were sandwiched in between.

The first wrestling match was between Jameson and Miller. Both are young and strong and it proved a very interesting match. The former succeeded in throwing the latter twice.

The next match was between Harry G. Dobner and Lieut. Sam Bardelson. All interest had centered upon this and there was considerable betting. The men entered the ring at about 9 o'clock, and it was twenty minutes before they succeeded in getting hold of each other. Dobner won the first round after a hard fought battle, but the second round proved very easy as Bardelson was badly played out. Joseph Duchamp was Dobner's second and trainer and James Dainard, of St. Hilaire, acted in the same capacity for Bardelson.

The last wrestling match was between Chas. Schuster and Ole Olson, of Warren. It was a backhold match and the latter succeeded in throwing the former twice. This was an exceptionally good match although neither had done any training.

Herbert Fuller acted as referee and that he made a good one is an undisputed fact.

A RAILROAD

May Be Extended to the Red Lake.

A preliminary survey of the extention of the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota railroad has just been completed. The proposed extention will run north, probably to Nebish, where the Red Lake Transportation company has twelve miles of standard gauge road in operation. It is generally understood that the B. & N. will connect with this road, thus opening a large and underveloped country.

Paid Up Well.

Personal property taxes in Red Lake county are squared up much better than real estate taxes. County Treasurer Tandberg reports that Gervais has paid every item of personal taxes; other townships are behind one, two, or perhaps four or five items while the cities lead in delinquents, although the books are cleared to an extent that is creditable to the tax payers of the county.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Red Lake County Well at the Head.

Red Lake county has 2,506 school children and receives $2,255.40 from the March state apportionment. Although Red Lake is the youngest in the state there are 28 counties with a lesser school enrollment.

'TWILL BE GOOD

A Match Between J. A. Dainard and Ole Olson.

A wrestling match which promises to be the event of the season was made the first of the week between James Dainard, of St. Hilaire, and Ole Olson, of Warren. It is to take place in Hamre's hall in this city on Saturday evening, April 1st, and both men are now training for the mill. It is to be catch-as-catch-can, three points down to constitute a fall, best three out of five.

Both men are exceptionally strong. James Dainard is well known throught the country and has the reputation of being an all around athlete. Olson is a well built man, weighing about 180, a blacksmith by trade, and has been working in the woods for Buckham & Canady all winter. He is now upon Joseph Duchamp's farm, eight miles west of town, where he will train until the match comes off. Both men have placed with Chris Amundson a sum of money as a guarantee of their appearance in the ring on the date above mentioned. The price of admission will be 50 cents, the winner to take all the gate receipts. It is expected that a large crowd will be up from St. Hilaire, and there will be considerable betting.

An $8,000 Block.

Lemieux Bros. have purchased from Dr. L. Lemieux his two lots on Main st., formerly occupied by his residence, Ed. Garceau's store, and Hibner's drug store. Consideration paid was $2,000. The boys will errect an $8,000 two story brick block, with public opera hall on the second floor, the ground floor to be occupied by their department store.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Red Lake County's Cash.

The joint statement of the auditor and treasurer of Red Lake county shows that the county has now on hand $20,616.67. Of this $18,927.05 is deposited in the First State Bank of Red Lake Falls, and $4,293.68 in the First State Bank of Thief River Falls.

After Karl.

Fred Fair, the North Dakota wrestling champion, has gone to Thief River Falls. Can it be he intends to dispute Commissioner Hansen's right to the belt?—Red Lake Falls Courier.

"It's All Right—We're Coming."

Will Benzie, of Thief River Falls, was in the city Wednesday—and an aching void was acceptably filled for he and friend for the ball given by the fire department of his city that evening—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Leased a Hotel.

H. N. Parker, a former resident of this city, who for the past year has been watchman for the St. Hilaire Lumber company, last week leased the Hotel St. Hilaire of the owners, Chas. Tedford and Martin Bjorke. It is a good piece of property and Mr. Parker's many friends in this city hope he will succeed in doing his share of the business.

ANOTHER NAME

That Will Sound a Little Better.

If the state legislature and the citizens of this place are willing an opportunity may be given to exchange the name of Thief River Falls for one that at least would sound more honest.

The citizens of Little Falls are desirous to change the name of that place to Great Falls, and find that they cannot do it unless a general law is passed by the legislature allowing cities to change their names. If the law would pass it would give the people of this place an opportunity to change the name of the city.

More Than Ever.

Every indication points to a large increase in wheat acreage in this section this spring. There are many new settlers and a number of those located on the diminished reservation will for the first time this spring put in a number of acres to wheat. All of the farmers in fact are increasing their fields.

Christian Forbearance.

It is down at Halstad that Christian fortitude of a high order is exhibited under trying circumstances. Recently a criminal case was tried there. The wronged man and complaining witness, the defendant, the prosecuting attorney and the constable sat down and played a friendly game of cards while the jury was deliberating upon a verdict.—Norman County Herald.

Will Locate Here.

Dr. Francis, the St. Hilaire physician, has decided to locate in this city about April 1st. He has leased his residence in St. Hilaire to Banker Hanney. Mr. Francis has worked up a large practice in this city and surrounding country, and it was at the solicitation of many people that he locates here.

THE MILL

It Is Now Being Remodeled.

A large crew of men are now busily engaged remodeling the saw mill of P. & J. Meehan, and it is the intention to have the mill in running order by the time the ice goes out. The north half is being torn down and on this side the addition will be built. A crew of men were down to Red Lake Falls the first of the week and removed to this city an engine, which with the present one in the mill will be used to furnish the power. New boilers will be put in.

A Wolf Hunt.

The citizens of Fosston, McIntosh and vicinity are making grand preparations for a wolf hunt which will take place in the township of Brandsvold. Five hundred men will take part, and it is the intention to form a large circle around a swamp and slowly advance toward the center. In this way the wolves will be brought into a small circle and will then be killed with clubs and spears.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The house did not adjourn in order to give the representatives an opportunity to go home and vote at the township elections. And all the various townships held elections just the same.

W. W. Erwin, the noted criminal lawyer, has removed from St. Paul to St. Louis. Mr. Erwin's departure from this state will be regretted even by those who have not indorsed his opinions or at all times approved of his methods.

The construction bureau of the navy department last week commenced the preparation of plans for six 2,500-ton protected cruisers, authorized by the last appropriation bill. The designs will be new and somewhat radical in comparison with ships of that class now in the navy. Their speed and sailing radius will surpass those of any ships of their size afloat, and their equipment and armament will be entirely up to date.

An important contribution to the literature of the day is that in the March number of the North American Review by the late Nelson Dingley, Jr., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House of Representatives, and author of the Dingley Tariff Bill. Under the title of "The Sources of National Revenue," Mr. Dingley deals with the expenditures of our national Government since the adoption of the constitution, affirming that, tried by the test of experience, whether in its revenue producing qualities, influence on our export trade or in the general prosperity of the country, the present tariff policy is justified by its fruits.

The design for the Lafayette monument which is to be erected in Paris next year and paid for by the contributions of the school children of the United States is being worked out in New York by several sculptors under the direction of an advisory board. President McKinley, who is president of the Lafayette Monument association, and the board of managers have intrusted the entire responsibility of selecting the design and superintending the work to a committee. The only condition is that the statue, the pedestal and everything else shall be made of American material by American artists and be completed in time to be erected and unveiled on the Fourth of July, 1900.

W. A. Case, of St. Hilare, is organizing a lodge of Modern Woodmen at Bemidji.

Red Lake Falls citizens have petitioned the council to put on a night policeman.

F. J. Creamer and S. L. Collins, who have been selling farm machinery at Crookston, have dissolved partnership and will each go at it alone hereafter.

Some of the young men of East Grand Forks have formed an anti-marriage society, styled the "Marble Hearts." The young ladies reply, that the men will be forced to remain single anyway.

Phœnix is the name Elias Steenerson and several other Grand Forks capitalists have christened the new saw mill town in the Black Duck country. It is located on section 2, town 149, range 32.

Sortedahl & Storaasli, the well known Red Lake Falls abstracters, have dissolved partnership, and the business will be conducted by M. O. Sortedahl hereafter. Mr. Storaasli will remove to Missouri and locate upon a farm.

A meeting will be held in Crookston this week to consider the advisibility of forming a mutual hail insurance company. It will do business in Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Red Lake, Norman and Clay counties.

Joseph Beaurdeau, an early settler in Red Lake Falls, who is in Alaska, writes a friend that he has an interest in a mine there that amounts to $100,000, and wants the friend to come out and help him enjoy prosperity.

The Brainerd & Northern Railroad Company is building a dock on the east side of Lake Irvine, where the Mississippi leaves the lake, for loading logs on cars to be taken to the Brainerd Lumber company's mill at Brainerd.

The Argyle Banner says: John Craik killed a 35-pound lynx near his place one day last week. Mr. Craik lives on the open prairie, a place very seldom frequented by these animals. The shooting was done with a shot gun, B shot being the charge used.

The state of Minnesota this year collects $1,201,271.77 from the railroads of the state, being an increase of $130,000 over the previous year. The Great Northern pays the largest tax, being called upon to put up $267,854.80 as against $175,460.79 from the Northern Pacific.

A serious accident happened to the five-year-old child of A. Lizotte, in the town of Louisville, last week. The child was playing with matches, which in some way ignited, setting fire to her clothing and burning her very severely about the head and shoulders.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

J. W. Shields is probably one of the most successful wolf hunters in the county. He came on Monday last with 17 wolves, as the result of a week's hunt. Mr. Shields does most of his hunting with a pair of grey hounds which he has trained to "run down" and judging by the number he has presented to Auditor Gunnerson for bounty this winter, they must certainly be a valuable pair of dogs.—Hallock News.

Miss Lena Smith, daughter of F. W. Smith, living about twelve miles north of Bemidji, met with an accident last Thursday which will no doubt leave her totally blind. Her little brother was snapping gun caps on a flatiron, and one of the pieces struck Miss Smith in the eye, severing the muscles.

F. A. Carter, of Black Duck country, stopped over here for a couple of days last week transacting business with the Red Lake Falls Lumber Co. Mr. Carter was on his way to Ohio to close a deal with some eastern parties for some valuable pine land in the Red Lake country.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Register of Deeds Samuel Gibeau has purchased J. M. Bray's residence and two lots on Third street. This is one of the finest pieces of residence property in the city. Mr. Bray will have the residence flat over his saloon fitted up at once and expects to move into it by the 5th of Aprill.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

During his recent visit west, J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, selected a site for a tie pickling plant at Kalispel, Mont., which he proposes to errect during the spring and where all the ties of the Great Northern will, in the future, undergo a chemical bath, known in railroad circles as "pickling" which adds martially to the life of the tie. The plant will necessitate the employment of a large force of men.

There are five cases of diphtheria in town and the vicinity. Three of the cases were discovered Saturday, and the city board of health promptly quarantined each of the houses in which the disease was found to exist. The sick ones are Willie Harris, Leesa Lakin, two daughters of Trone Nelson, and one daughter of J. H. Lord. None of the cases has been reported as being of dangerous character.—Warren Register.

A young married lady got on the train with her new babe and didn't have time to purchase a ticket in advance. She tendered a five dollar bill to the conductor for her fare. As the official took the money he casually glanced down at the baby and inquired: "Haven't you anything smaller?"—meaning in money. She replied: "No, I've only been married a year and this is my first child." So the papers say, and "it must be so."

The Bemidji Pioneer says that if the Cass Lake Indian reservation ever goes on the market, either as pine land or for homestead entry, there will be another Indian war before the settlers have crossed the lines. The people of Cass Lake are already apprehensive lest some uniformed fool shall come into the town with ten of fifteen gallons of whiskey and set fire to the brains of the buck Indians who make that their trading point.

At a meeting of delegates from the various camps comprising the picnic association of the Modern Woodmen for northern Minnesota and eastern North Dakota, held at Fargo last week, it was decided to hold the 1899 picnic at Detroit again this year. A general committee on arrangements was named and other matters of detail were attended to. The picnic last year was a great success, but it is expected that this year's gathering can be made even better.

Jim Kelly, of Thief River Falls, passed through the city Monday enroute home from the Meehan camp. He had on display, at Hotel Wilmes, two waste baskets, made from shavings, the work of two educated squaws, who alone of all the dusky Chippewa women possess the secret of manufacture. The baskets are beautiful pieces of handwork in four colors, and the long shavings cut as evenly and smoothly as ribbons, are interwoven into artistic designs.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

An exchange says that a small church was sadly in need of general repairs, and a meeting was being held in it with a view of raising funds for that purpose. The minister having said $500 would be required, a very wealthy (and equally stingy) member of the congregation rose and said he would give one dollar, just as he sat down, however, a lump of plaster fell from the ceiling and hit him on the head, whereupon he rose hastily and called out that he made a mistake; he would give $50. This was too much for an enthusiastic present, who, forgetful of everything, called out fervently, "Oh, Lord, hit him again!"

There is understood to be one of the greatest deals on hand as affecting the interests of the Northwest that has yet been accomplished. It is the building of several new steamships which will be put on the line between Seattle and the Orient by the Great Northern Railway company. This is supposed to be the significance of the present visit to the sound of President Hill and prominent other officials. It is the intention to run a service direct from Seattle to Yokohama and Hong Kong, with other vessels going to Vladivostock. From this it will be necessary to have at least six vessels to give a monthly service. There will be $10,000,000 spent in this enterprise, most of which will go to purchasing and building vessels. It is believed that it will be at least a year before the line will be in operation.

The bill providing for state inspection of meat will perhaps develop a spirited fight. It is introduced on the recommendation of the State Board of Health and its purpose is to protect our people against tained meat. There is at present federal inspection of meat sent outside of the state but that does not apply to what is used for home consumption. The business interests of St. Paul are much opposed to the bill on account of the stock yards at South St. Paul which, it is claimed, will be injured by such a law. The promoters of the measure summarize the injury to the state on account of inspection as follows:

Stock is shipped from the west. It is unloaded in the stock yards of this state where there is federal inspection. The federal inspector condemns a certain percentage. This percentage cannot be slaughtered for use in the abbatoirs, nor can it be shipped into another state for slaughter. Being unfit for food this stock should be killed and tanked and be used only for fertilizer, etc. But this course is not followed. A shipper who finds his stock condemned can sell it in this state as "stockers," or if he kills it outside the stock yard he can market his meat without interference.

Citizens of Red Lake county have forwarded to Senator Myran a petition asking that he secure the passage by the legislature of a memorial to congress for the opening up of that part of the Red Lake Indian reservation within the borders of Red Lake county. All the reservations should be opened up, after the allotments are made in severalty, and the work should be done at once. There has been far too long a delay now, and the progress of Northern Minnesota is retarded in consequence.—Norman County Index.

Too Clever by Half.

The people of the Orkney Islands are blamed, as a rule, for "looking at both sides of a penny before parting with it." Quite a laughable example occurred the other day. A man, slightly deaf, went to the doctor with a bruised finger. The doctor washed and bandaged it, and when the man asked the charge said: "Oh, it is just a trifle, and won't cost anything." The man not hearing distinctly, said: "No, no; you will need to make it less than that." The doctor, catching on, said: "Very well; we will say two shillings and six pence." Which the man promptly paid, thinking he knocked something off.—Answers.

CARE OF PIANOS.

How They Should Be Treated to Keep in Good Condition.

Half the pianos in this world catch winter colds exactly as we do. They get hoarse or have a cough, or a stiff note, or some similar complaint, which cannot be cured by home remedies, but require tedious and expensive doctoring. In order to prevent these avoidable ailments it is as well to know how to take care of the piano. Each spring cleaning housewife who is having the domestic piano "put to rights" during her present upheaval of the household, should very carefully note the following:

A piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, where the temperature is even, say 60 or 70 degrees, the year round, not cold one day and hot the next. The instrument should not, however, be too near the source of heat. It should be kept closed and covered with a felt cloth when not in use, particularly in frosty weather.

Always place the piano against an inside wall and a little out from it. When tuning or repairing is necessary, employ a responsible and expert workman. Do not allow children to drum on it. A professional musician may expend a like amount of strength upon the keyboard, but if the right keys are struck much less harm is done than when children amuse themselves. Avoid littering the top with bric-a-brac, as it affects the tone of the instrument.

A well known maker recommends that the case be frequently wiped off with a chamois skin wrung out in tepid water. Where the case is very highly polished and dark this is absolutely necessary and little else will serve to remove the dust which settles in the fretwork.

To remove finger marks and blue mold, mix thoroughly two tablespoonfuls of salad oil and one tablespoonful of vinegar. Rub on a little of this mixture with a soft rag and polish with a woolen cloth.—Philadelphia Times.

How to Black a Stove.

Wash off all grease spots with soapsuds, and if there be any rough rusty places or spots where something has burned on the stove rub with a piece of sandpaper. Mix the black lead to the consistency of cream with water or vinegar. Apply this to the stove when cool. On becoming nearly dry, rub it with a stiff brush till it shines. Black the oven inside and out. If stoves be blackleaded while they are hot, it burns on and will not take a really good polish.

How to Make Mutton Ragout.

Cut the mutton into two inch lengths (three cupfuls in all), season with salt and pepper, dust with flour. Place two tablespoonfuls of butter in a pan, heat very hot and brown the meat, shaking often. Draw the pan to the back of the range; lift the meat out with a skimmer and place it on the serving dish. Add a pint of oysters (chopped) to the gravy; also an onion and a sprig of parsley minced. Cook for five minutes and add a cupful of milk. When hot, add two tablespoonfuls of flour stirred to a paste with a little cold water. When these are well cooked, taste the gravy and add more seasoning if necessary; then pour it over the mutton and serve at once. The oysters should be drained well before adding to the gravy.

How to Make Codfish Souffle.

Half a pint of stale bread crumbs beated with half a cupful of milk, and when it is hot and smooth a dash of cayenne and half of a boxful of shredded fish. After a thorough mixing add the beaten yolks of two eggs and one tablespoonful of butter. Beat the whites of three eggs to a froth, fold into the mixture quickly, lightly and thoroughly and bake until a light brown in individual china cases and in one pudding dish.

How to Cure Hives.

Hives is a peculiar nervous disorder of the skin. It is commonly due to some disorder of digestion. Poisons are formed in the stomach or intestine by the fermentation or putrefaction of the food. These poisons, absorbed into the blood, give rise to this peculiar affection. In certain persons honey, strawberries, oysters and other substances give rise to hives because of some personal idiosyncracy. The disease can be cured either by avoiding the special articles of food which give rise to the disease or by correcting the disorder of digestion when this is the cause. A dry diet, especially a diet of fruits, grains and nuts, is to be especially recommended in cases of this sort.

How to Wassail Apples.

Cut three or four sour apples into eighths. Melt one level tablespoonful of butter in a chafing dish and when melted and bubbling put in the apples sprinkled with one tablespoonful of granulated sugar. After the apples soften put in half a cupful of cider (sweet or sour), which the apples will absorb. Sprinkle with a saltspoonful of powdered cinnamon and serve with whipped cream.

How to Make Veal Sandwiches.

Mince one cup of cold boiled veal quite fine, sprinkle with a saltspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of olive oil or melted butter. Take a loaf of bread one or two days old. Carefully trim off the crust. Set the loaf on one small end and cut into long, thin slices lengthwise of the loaf. Butter them and spread with the veal. Roll up like jelly roll cake and slice into thin round slices. Spread a fringed napkin on a plate, lay the small "rolls" in neat piles and set on the ice until serving time.

How to Cook Plum Porridge.

Old fashioned plum porridge may be made either of wheat flour or Indian meal. When it is made of the meal, it will take a longer time to prepare, as it requires at least two hours to cook thoroughly. When the porridge is done, add the stewed plums. Prunes or raisins can also be used. Stir the fruit in slowly to prevent it breaking and serve with sugar and cream.

AWNLESS BROME GRASS.

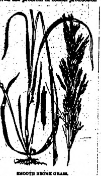
Valuable and Remarkable Characteristics Observed In Tests.

Two notable claims advanced for Bromus inermis, commonly known as smooth, armless or Hungarian brome grass, are its excellent endurance of summer heat and drought and its ability to grow on comparatively poor and hard soil.

This is a perennial grass with creeping root stalks that send up erect, strong, smooth stems from 1½ to 4 feet high, with a free growth of leaves, and bears an abundance of seed. It has been well recommended for light soils in regions subject to extremes of temperature or long periods of drought, where the finer grasses do not thrive. Some years ago the South Dakota station said of smooth brome grass that it was the best grass yet tried at that station, catching well where properly sown, giving a good sod the first year and a fair yield of hay in favorable seasons. The forage, though coarse, was considered of excellent quality and under ordinary circumstances a large amount of early spring and fall feed could be obtained in addition to a good yield of hay.

Awnless brome grass is reported as remaining green in winter in the south, where it is esteemed for grazing. It grows well in cold climates, and Canadian reports speak very highly of it, both for nutritive qualities and luxuriant habit of growth.

In the report of tests with this grass under the direction of Dr. Saunders of the Canadian experiment stations it is mentioned as doing well on alkaline soil. The report further says: "Not only does awnless brome grass thrive in the rich, moist soil of the eastern provinces, but its growth and productiveness are so wonderful even in the dry plains of the west that its cultivation may be said without exaggeration to have solved the problem of fodder production on a large scale in the arid western sections. Under irrigation brome grass has given on 200 acres of land the enormous yield of 4½ tons per acre. One notable feature which distinguishes this grass is that, while most grasses, after the flowering period, deteriorate rapidly while the seeds ripen, awnless brome grass can be left standing until the seeds are fully ripe, yet the hay crop will be heavier without being poorer than if it had been cut while in flower, as should be done generally for all other hay grasses in order to get the best value. This remarkable characteristic of this grass is due to the fact that after the seed bearing stem has grown up a great number of leafy shoots spring up from its base."



SMOOTH BROME GRASS.

Cowpeas on Stubble Land.

In answer to correspondents who ask whether cowpeas cannot be sown on stubble land after harvest, a writer in Farm and Fireside says: I wish to discourage such an experiment. In a moist summer I have got fair growth in this way, but the nitrogen was largely lost by action of frost. In an ordinary season there is insufficient growth to justify the outlay. It is my experience that this plant will not thrive when sown in corn at the last working, although in the hot south this is a common method. It is valuable for thin or weedy strips of land that need an extra catch crop for fertilizing purposes, but must have the full heat of summer for its development. It makes a good growth on land that fails to make a profitable stand of clover.

News and Notes.

The statistician of the department of agriculture, from preliminary returns on the acreage of corn, estimates a reduction of 8 per cent from the area harvested last year. There is a decrease of 502,000 acres in Illinois, of 303,000 in Iowa, of 661,000 in Missouri, of 732,000 in Kansas, and of 482,000 in Nebraska.

A beekeeper says that those beekeepers living in or near a town would do well to exert themselves in inducing the town people to plant basswood trees in preference to other kinds.

American Cultivator says that when there is a fair set of fruit on trees or vines, if the fruit continues green longer than it should, a quantity of nitrate of potash very largely diluted with water will have a most extraordinary effect in hastening its ripening.

According to the July crop reports, with a few notable exceptions, among which is Georgia, with a condition of 104, indications as to the peach crop are somewhat unfavorable.

A new preparation under the name of "laurel green" is on the market as a substitute for paris green. According to chemical analysis of the Cornell station, it contains arsenic, copper and lime and sulphuric and carbonic acids. These same substances would be found in a mixture of paris green and bordeaux mixture after drying.

THE BREAKER.

In appearance he was about as commonplace as other people—a middle aged man, inclined to portliness. As the train moved on he discussed commonplace subjects with me in a commonplace way. I should not have been surprised to have been told that he was a stockbroker or a solicitor, or that he was engaged in the tea trade. In the course of our chat something happened to be said about curious occupations.

"Well," said my companion, "I do not suppose that there is any more curious occupation than my own. I am a breaker."

He had not at all the appearance of a man used to horses, but I suggested, "A horse breaker, you mean?"

"No," he said, "just a plain breaker; a man who breaks things—breaks anything that requires to be broken; gets his living by breaking."

I glanced nervously at the communicator, though he looked even less like a lunatic than he did like a horse breaker.

"I see," he said, smiling, "that I must explain. When I left Cambridge with a classical degree, no prospects and no influence I looked about for a profession. I found everything overcrowded. Besides none of the professions appealed to me at all. I like to travel about a little, and I enjoy social life. I like talking—talking to any one. I hate work of any kind. This being the case, I looked about me to see if there was not a chance for some new profession—if among our million wants there was not one that was not supplied.

"The idea came to me by accident. I was stopping at my uncle's house when he received as a present from his wife's brother a singularly ugly but very valuable pair of oriental vases. His wife's brother was frequently in my uncle's house, and therefore these abominations had to be displayed. I heard him grumbling about this. I suggested that he should sell them. The idea was of course absurd. He told me so. Nor, he said, could he break them himself, for his wife's brother would never forgive him; nor could he ask his wife to break them, because, although he has been married 15 years, he felt that he did not know her well enough; nor could he ask the servants to break them, for that would encourage carelessness and thriftlessness. 'That is all right,' I said. I rose from my place and smashed the vases one after the other on the floor. 'Sorry I was so clumsy,' I said. 'You had better ring and have this rubbish cleared away.' He rang and told the servant that I had broken them accidentally. When she had gone, he said without a smile, 'It seems rather a pity.' I said. I am short of ready money. Could you lend me £5?' He wrote me a check for £50 and said that I was a useful man to know. Then I said, 'Recommend me to your friends, for already I saw the possibility of my future profession. He mentioned me to some half dozen people he knew, some of whom I had never seen in my life before. They sent me invitations to their houses, and they indicated the objects on which I was to operate. In my first week I broke, I remember, a lamp shaped like an owl, an oil painting, a tea service and a dining room table."

"But an oil painting," I said—"how does one break an oil painting?"

"It is simple enough," he said. "I first of all undid the wires so that the picture fell, then in picking it up I put my foot through the face. It was a portrait of my host's wife's aunt. It was more difficult to break the dining room table. I recollect that it became necessary for the purpose to invent a somewhat boisterous form of round game. Even then we had to play it for three evenings before the legs came off. When I left this house, my host handed me a check and promised to recommend me to other people. I never advertise, and I have more breaking to do than I can possibly find time for. If I could find a young man with plenty of tact, I would take him as an assistant."

"It must need some tact," I suggested.

"It does. It so often happens that I am employed by the husband without the knowledge of the wife, or by the wife without the knowledge of the husband. Even with the utmost tact one gets oneself disliked, but that I must put up with. The other day one of my clients asked me to come to his house to break a dinner service. I dined there and made myself as pleasant as I could and told several good stories. But then I also broke the dinner service, or most of it, and it was one to which my hostess was much attached. She said to him afterward, 'I will never have that brute in my house again!'"

"And what did he say?"

"He said: 'I fully agree with you, my dear. To the best of my belief the man was drunk. If he had not been the son of an old college friend, I should never have asked him at all.' That was a little mean, but then it was necessary for him to cover himself in some way, and as I never break a dinner service under £25, I received some solatium for the indignity."

"Have you got any engagements at present?" I asked.

"Yes," he said, "I am going to one now, but it is a trifling thing, requiring no tact at all. Had I had an assistant I should have sent him. I am to go the day after a wedding reception when the presents are being packed. Those which from their ugliness or worthlessness are not worth packing up and sending to the bridegroom's distant home have been placed on a separate shelf. I shall upset that shelf and accidentally stamp on anything which is not broken in the fall. The job won't take five minutes, and I get 3 guineas for it. I am doing it for the bridegroom without the knowledge of the bride. Men begin to deceive women very soon, I find."

"I have," I said, "one or two little objects in my own home which—"

But at this moment the train entered Victoria station, and, though I managed to complete my sentence, and my companion said that he would be glad at any time to oblige me, in the confusion of our arrival I neglected to take his name and address or to give him mine.—Barry Pain.

An Actor's Dose.

It is told of a well known actor, now dead, that he would never take any physic, and his medical adviser was often obliged to resort to some stratagem to impose a dose on him.

There is a play in which the hero is sentenced in prison to drink a cup of poison. The actor was playing the part one night and had given directions for the cup to be filled with port, but what was his horror when he came to drink it to find it contained a dose of senna. To throw it away was out of the question, as he had to turn the goblet upside down to show his persecutors he had drained every drop of it.

He drank the medicine with the sighness of a poisoned martyr, but he never forgave his medical man, as was proved at his death, for he died without paying his doctor's bill.—London Answers.

THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

VOL. XVI. NO. 11. THIEF RIVER FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1899. TERMS—$1.50 IN ADVANCE.

NEWS NOTES CRIBBED FROM OUR EXCHANGES.

The village of Fertile voted no license at the election held there last week.

•

The Northern Pacific now gives Red Lake Falls a tri-weekly train service.

•

James Mead has been elected chief of the Red Lake Falls fire department.

•

Landlord Markham, of St. Hilaire, so says the Gazette, is contemplating building a hotel at Red Lake Falls.

•

The St. Hilaire band boys have received their instruments, and peace no longer reigns, for they practice night and day.

•

Ray W. Jones, a former prospective citizen of Thief River Falls, was elected mayor of the village of Frazee last week.

•

Diphtheria is raging at the farm residence of Gustav Johnson in the town of River Falls. One child died and two more are very sick.

•

According to an estimate just made by the department of agriculture at Washington the farmers of the United States still have 198,000,000 bushels of last year's wheat crop on hand. They are waiting for better prices.

•

James A. Mead secured the contract for building a pier above the bridge over the Clearwater river at Red Lake Falls at the foot of Bottineau avenue. The pier is intended as an ice breaker, will be about 40 feet long and will cost $600.

•

The young people of Ada, between the ages of 13 and 21 years, have issued an appeal to the voters of that village to vote against saloon licenses on the grounds that "the safety of themselves and of their companions are in danger by the licensed saloon."

•

A new colony of over 4,000 Dunkards will congregate in Chicago March 28th and will leave in a body for new homes in Northwestern Minnesota and North Dakota, along the Great Northern lines. They came from Virginia, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin.

•

The city council of Red Lake Falls passed a curfew ordinance several months ago, but as the city has had no bell the ordinance has been a dead letter up to last week, when a 300-pound bell was put up in the city hall tower, and all "kids" under sixteen are now supposed to be off the streets by 8 o'clock p. m.

•

A women in town whose husband made a practice of staying out late at night, adopted a most novel and effective cure, says an exchange. On hubby reaching the door, wifey would whisper through the key-hole, "Is that you, Will?" Will is not hubby's name, and he not only stays at home nights now, but keeps a loaded gun for Will's reception.

•

Crookston real estate dealers report a phenomenal demand for farm property this spring and say farm values are rapidly raising in consequense. Some immigrants have already arrived with stock and machinery, but the larger number will come later. The days of cheap lands in the most fertile section of the globe is about at an end. Now is the time to catch on, while there are odd pieces which, for various reasons, can be picked up cheap.

•

Friends and acquaintances of D. D. Williams formerly of Crookston and William Smith formerly of Red Lake Falls and a brother of Joseph Smith of Crookston will be pleased to learn that they have "struck it rich," having sold a mine of which they jointly owned one-third for sixty thousand dollars cash, Montreal parties being the purchasers. They are living at Boise, Idaho, and Baker City, Oregon.

•

The public examiner will be in Crookston April 1, for the purpose of completing the work of going over the books in the county treasurer's office to determine the amount, and locate the dates of the items of shortage occured in the office during the administration of Treasurer Beaudry. This will enable the county to claim of the bondsmen a settlement of the shortage and will be very satisfactory news to the taxpayers.

•

The postoffice department at Washington has ruled that the writer of a letter has the right to regain possession of it providing he can prove to the satisfaction of the postmaster at the office from which the letter was sent that he was the one who wrote it. Even if a letter has arrived at its destination and before it is delivered to the person to whom it was sent, it may be recalled through a telegram through the mailing office. The reason assigned is that the United States is only the agent of the writer while the letter is in transit.

•

The action of the county attorney in closing up the gambling holes in town has met with universal applause, and the better and solid element of the community are staying with him to a man. And the county attorney says he does not wish ordinarily to interfere in the affairs of any village in the county, but that when the village authorities prove as totally incompetent as the present ones have, he feels compelled to do so. He does not propose that Beltrami county shall be governed by thugs and gamblers from Moorhead and Breckenridge.—Bemidji Pioneer.

An exchange truly says that it is always best to wait for evidence before passing judgment. When you hear reports detrimental to young ladies or gentlemen, don't be hasty in forming conclusions. It is better to be charitable when anyone is in trouble. Today it is somebody else's girl or boy; tomorrow it may be yours. Trouble comes to us all and we should be willing to extend the same charity expect from others. Gossip distorts and magnifies occurrences that have no foundation in fact, and injustice is often done to innocent parties.

•

Mayor Brown, of Crookston, is building a steamer that will ply the waters of Cass Lake during the summer, and be useful as a tow boat to move the rafts of logs that will be sawed at the mills there, as well as fill the need for a passenger craft to take pleasure parties about that beautiful sheet of water. The steamer will be 60 feet long and with the guards, 14 feet wide. It will be furnished with engines of high power, and run with a screw propeller. Mr. Brown was captain of a Mississippi steamer during the earlier years of his career, and his experience in that line will be pleasantly renewed in the new work out east.

J. H. Arthur and wife, of Humbolt, Minn., near St. Vincent, arrived on the N. P. Friday. Mr. Arthur has charge of the Great Northern station here during the absence of O. H. Thomas at Chicago, who has been put in the passenger department of the Great Northern there during the vacation of one of the employes. The work in the Chicago office is mainly the direction of immigration into the right channels, and the general supervision of freight and passenger traffic. Only the brightest of the company's employes who have a thorough grasp of the business are taken in there, and it is a compliment to Mr. Thomas that he has been selected. He filled a like position for a time last summer in the Southern district.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Farm, Stock and Home: New Settler, Polk county, Minn., writes: "How would it do to sow wheat and flax together on new grub land? Wheat alone generally lodges. When to sow and how much seed of each to the acre?" Answer: It will answer to sow flax and wheat on newly grubbed land. But the flax will not wholly prevent the lodging of wheat in a growing season. Sow at the same time as wheat is usually sown. Sow the usual amount of wheat and 6 to 8 quarts of flax per acre. If you had a flock of sheep, and pastured the wheat for a time after it was up, the crop would not lodge and the yield of grain would be increased. Why does not every farmer keep a flock of sheep even though it be only a small one?

It can do no harm to repeat, once in a while, the story of the man who on his death bed, called his sons to his side and said: "Boys, there is a treasure hidden somewhere in the soil of this farm not far beneath the surface. Dig for it. And never let the farm get away from you. The treasure is there and you will find it if you search." The old man expired and the sons in due time began the search in a systematic manner. Beginning at one side of the farm they spaded up the earth to a good depth doing a little, year after year until the whole farm had been explored. They found the treasure, not in the expected form of a pot of gold, but of big crops due to the thorough working of the soil. The moral is plain, and has its application in Red Lake county.

Here is a story that was sent me from St. Paul by a special correspondent: A frog, a duck, a lamb and a polecat started for the circus. When they arrived, all were able to pay the admission fee except the poor polecat, who was compelled to crawl under the canvass. This is how it was: The frog had a green back, the duck had a bill, and the lamb had four quarters, but the poor polecat only had a scent—and that was bad—Prison Mirror.

Mike Kirsch, of Crookston, always contrives to keep his name prominently before the public eye. Although he has fallen down in a political way with several large, heavy thuds he bobs up serenely every few months with a new proposition in the interests of the people—or himself. Occasionally he becomes a trans-medium and sees things never before revealed to ordinary mortals. His latest revelation is the idea that for 14 years the city of Crookston has been unjustly but unknowingly deprived of a part of its revenues to the extent of $15,000.00 by Polk county. It seems that the city charter of Crookston contains a proviso that the county treasurer shall turn over to the city when paid, all delinquent taxes due the city, with interest and penalties accumulated thereon; while, as a matter of fact the county treasurers in the past have been accustomed to follow the general statutes of the state and turned over only the amount of the tax, putting the penalties and interest into the general revenue fund of the county. This has been the rule ever since the city charter went into effect in 1885. The revelation was withheld from Kirsch while he was commissioner of Polk county, but having lost his job there and become a city councilman it comes upon him now with a double force. Acting upon his suggestion the city has now made a demand upon the county and the matter is likely to go into the courts. The matter is interesting to Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls because section 82 of the city charter contains virtually the same provision as the Crookston charter, and the outcome of their demand will be watched with much interest.—Red Lake County Courier.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

If a congressman is to be nominated for governor, we believe Frand M. Eddy is entitled to the promotion.

Senator Myran's bill appropriating $100,000 for drainage purposes has been unanimously recommended to pass by the senate drainage committee.

For some unaccountable reason Gov. Lind has not as yet honored Red Lake county with an appointment. Perhaps it is because there are no Democrats up here.

It is not postively stated that Judge Collins will be an active candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. Mr. Collins is one of the best politicians in the state.

It is getting rather tiresome, this continuous talk of the Indians going on the war path again this spring. There are very few healthy and strong Indians in the state today, and these are degenerating at a rapid rate.

The potato crop of the United States last year amounted to 164,015,964 bushels, valued at $89,643,000. This is an average yield of 64.7 bushels to the acre, and estimating the population at 70,000,000 it gives us 2 2-7 bushels each.

Senator Grindeland, of Marshall county, has succeeded in getting his bill passed, requiring the commission merchants to fill a bond to protect their customers who consign grain shipments to them, from losing by their rascality.

At the request of the state grain growers association, Senator Myran last week presented a bill authorizing a commission consisting of the governor, auditor and attorney general to lease to the association the elevator site purchased by the state at Duluth.

The Gazette says that the citizens of Red Lake Falls would not take kindly to the idea of having that part of the Red Lake reservation in this county opened for settlement, as they fear that it would result in removing the county seat to Thief River Falls.

The discovery of gold in the Klondike has raised Canada to the fifth place in the list of gold-producing countries, with a total of $14,190,000, the Transvaal with $73,476,600, being first, and the United States second with $64,300,000, Australia and Russia being third and fourth, respectively.

The one cent reduction in the rate of interest on deferred payments on state school lands would mean a saving $6,000 a year to actual resident farmers of the state, and would still realize to the state a better rate of interest than it is receiving from its investments in government and state bonds. Every dollar of this saving, let it be understood, is a direct benefit to the producing farmers of the state. It is not taking it out of one pocket and putting it into the other, but it is leaving it in the pockets of that class of citizens who already pay the highest rate of taxation upon their holdings, and who stand in need of the state's best protection.—Princeton Union.

The legislature has been busy junketing to the different state institutions the past ten days. We have yet to be convinced of any lasting benefit these junketing expeditions are to anybody. Of course those who go on them are royally entertained and have a jolly time, for which the institutions visited pay, but we never heard of any good results from them. The idea that legislatures legislate more intelligently after visiting the institutions is a fake, for they always find them on dress parade, and if there are any defects in the management they are always kept careful in the background so that the junketers don't see them.—Elk River Star News.

This from an exchange is not so bad: Two brothers from a north Missouri county appeared at the portals of the St. Joseph insane asylum, one of them to be incarcerated there as a patient, the other having him in charge as far as the asylum. They were dressed very much alike, and the casual observer on the train would not have detected any signs of insanity in either. When the keeper appeared each insisted he had brought the other. The asylum manager was in a quandary. He chatted with his visitors until a late hour and then locked them in a room together. Then he telegraphed to the authorities in the town where the brothers lived: "Two men from your town arrived today; dressed alike; one called Bill and talks about building an air line to the moon; the other goes by the name of Dave and advocated free silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; which shall I keep?"

Ives and Strawbridge.

Judge Frank Ives started last Monday morning for Cass Lake where he will engage in the newspaper business. With him in the enterprise will be associated Ben Strawbridge, late court reporter for this judicial district. The judge will arrange at once for the putting up of a suitable building, and as soon as possible the newspaper plant will be in running order. The judge has been appointed United States commissioner for that section of the country, though there will be no business for him to transact as commissioner before the reservation is thrown open to settlement, which, it is expected, will happen in June. Judge Ives and Mr. Strawbridge will also write insurance and handle real estate. The name of the paper is not yet selected nor is it certain just when Volume I, Number I will be issued.—Polk County Journal.

St. Hilaire's Election.

The election held at St. Hilaire last week was a very quiet one. Only one ticket was in the field and the following were elected.

Councilmen—D. Patterson, J. C. Dahl and W. A. Sorseleil.
Recorder—J. L. Johnson.

MRS. MORRILL

A Former Resident of This City Died in Minneapolis.

The following from the Minneapolis Times refers to the death of Mrs. I. C. Morrill, who is well known in this city, where her husband was formerly engaged in the hotel business:

"Mrs. Kate B. Morrill, wife of Isaac C. Morrill, one of the proprietors of the Brunswick hotel, died at her apartments in the hotel, after a lingering illness, early Sunday morning. She had been confined to her bed for several months with an attack of acute pneumonia. The funeral was held from the hotel at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon. The remains were taken to Pomeroy, Iowa, for interment.

"Mrs. Morrill was born in Boston, Mass., fifty-one years ago. She came to Iowa in 1872, and in 1888 removed to Minneapolis. She left three daughters, Mrs. Florence Oftedal, and May and Madge Morrill."

Mr. Morrill and family will have the sympathy of of many Thief River Falls friends in their berievement.

How to Make German Puffs.

Warm one cupful of sweet milk, add a heaping teaspoonful butter. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add to milk, which should be cooled, a little salt, one pint of flour. Beat smooth and stir through lightly the beaten whites. Bake in buttered cups or gem pans, not over half full.

How to Bathe.

We hear wonderful stories of English girls breaking the ice to jump into the bath. I have known a great many English girls with beautiful complexions who took their baths as regularly as they did any one of their meals, and their appetites were unusually good, says a writer in The Ladies' Home Journal. Every one of them took a tepid soap bath, and if she had no means of having a shower she gave one to herself by pouring water over all parts of her body, changing the temperature of this shower so that from tepid it became almost cool, but never icy cold.

How to Make Domestic Honey.

Common sugar four pounds, of water one quart; let slowly come to a boil and skim. Add pulverized alum, one-fourth ounce. Remove from the fire and stir in one-half ounce of cream of tartar and one tablespoonful of rose extract. It is now ready for use.

How to Cook Beef Kidneys.

A good way to serve beef kidneys is as follows: Wash and cut the kidneys into finger thick slices. Remove the gristle from the middle. Have ready some slices of bacon, place them together alternately and skewer them well. Grill them or roast them in a Dutch oven in front of the fire. Arrange them on a hot dish, with a sprinkling of parsley butter and serve them with a sauce piquante or plainly arranged on squares of fried toast.

How to Fry Squirrels.

Squirrel should be cooked the same way as spring chicken. If the squirrels chance to be old ones, steam them before rolling in egg and bread crumbs and frying. Two small squirrels should be enough for the regulation family.

CITY ENGINEER

It Is a Bone of Contention.

The relations between the Fire Department and the city council are at present in a strained condition and unless some condescention is made by the latter the former organization is liable to dissolve. The firemen believe that they should be allowed the privelege of naming the successor of Engineer Mickleson, but the council is of a different opinion. At a meeting of the council held Monday evening the firemen were informed that if they would select two or more men, the council would chose one of the number so selected to act as engineer. The firemen only want to select one and they want that one appointed engineer, otherwise they say they will all resign. There will be a meeting of the Fire Department Saturday evening to consider the matter.

Up-to-Date Logging.

The H. C. Akeley Lumber company, of Minneapolis, has been using during the present winter an engine designed and constructed by F. S. Farr, for hauling logs, and has gotten along entirely without horses. The engine is mounted on an ordinary sled and has four calked wheels which run in about the same tracks as horses usually do. The new motive log-hauling engine does the work of four teams, as four logging sleds are hauled by it on each trip.

A CREAMERY

One Can Be Had If the Farmers Are so Disposed.

C. J. Knox while in Iowa last week met a gentleman who is desirous of starting a creamery in this section, providing he can secure a certain amount of cream each week. The building of an institution of this kind would be of more benefit to the farmers than anything else. Farmers who have cows would do well to see Mr. Knox and talk the matter over.

S. Bisazza, F. Hibner and Chief Benzie had a rather exciting experience last Saturday. They were at Crookston and hired a team to take them to Thief River Falls. When about three miles from Wylie the driver lost control over the team and the occupants of the sleigh were thrown out. The driver hung to the lines and was dragged for about a half a mile when he was forced to let go, but he still continued to pursue the team and that is the last the Thief River Falls gentlemen saw of him. They walked to Wylie, arriving there at about 10 o'clock in the evening, and hired a team to drive to this city, which they reached at about 3 o'clock Sunday morning.

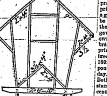
PORTABLE SELF FEEDER.

Ingenious Structure in Use on an Illinois Farm.

O. H. Gardner of McDonough county, Ills., describes in The Breeder's Gazette a self feeder in successful use on his farm. The framework is all bolted together, as nails would not withstand the strain when pulling the feeder from field to field by four horses. The runners are made of heavy 8 by 10 oak plank, each 16 feet long, and placed 6½ feet apart. The ends of the runners are rounded at both ends, so that the feeder may be pulled either way. Nine 2-by-4 joists each 9 feet long are bolted on to the runners about two feet apart. These joists are then fastened together by 2 by 6 joists which project over the runners far enough to support the feed trough. The trough is built about the width of a scoop. This permits of easily removing the grain from the trough should you choose to do so. This, however, is seldom done. Used in this way, however, the feeder makes a very cheap granary. The bottom of the feeder is built high in the middle and slopes to the feed trough on either side. The roof projects a little over the sides and measures about 14 feet from eave to eave. A door or cover is provided at either side for the feed trough. If one has cows in the lot at night, but wishes calves to eat grain from the feeder during the day, he can simply drop the lid when the cows are in the lot and raise it on turning them out. Calves can then eat oats or shelled corn or whatever you may have in the feeder for them. Cut the rafters for the floor out of 14 foot 2 by 4's, making them each 8½ feet long. Thirty-six rafters of this sort will be needed for the bottom and the drop on sides.



PLAN OF SELF FEEDER.

After the feeder is sided up with ship lap or flooring the roof of 1 by 8 sheeting is then put on, which is afterward covered with shingles. It is a good idea to put several braces across the feeder from eave to eave. Bolt these to the upright 2 by 4's. Strength will be given to the structure by running a one-half inch rod the length of the feeder and making it fast just below the grain doors. The feeder is about 16 feet long and has a capacity of about 1,000 bushels of corn. Total cost, including lumber, labor and hardware, will be about $50 or $60. From 50 to 60 head of cattle can be fed at one of these feeders. In adjusting the slides at the feed trough I place them so that I can just run my finger under them at the bottom. The cattle then have to lick the grain with their tongue. They get but small quantities in this way and clean it up before reaching in for more. Feeding from these troughs results in their thoroughly masticating the grain. Timid cattle will come up to the trough after the fighters have had their fill.

In order to show the value of the self feeder I herewith give the data concerning the feeding of 37 head of pure bred Angus steers and heifers. They were put to the feeder filled with oats on Nov. 15, 1896, eating what oats they wanted through the day and nursing the cows at night. Dec. 15 they were weaned. In March shelled corn was put in feeder on top of a few bushels of oats. The feed then until May was oats and corn. Corn was fed from this time on until they were taken to the stock show in November, 1897. Fifteen steers, about 10 months old, were shown there. They averaged about 1,140 pounds and sold at $5.40. They dressed out 63.86 per cent beef. The remaining 17 heifers and 5 steers were shipped Dec. 14, 1897; weighed 1,045 pounds at an average age of 17 months and sold at $5.40 and dressed 62.6 per cent. These two lots were fed nothing but corn, oats, hay, grass and rock salt. We visited the feeder but once in ten weeks, when we put in feed, and an occasional trip was necessary to supply rock salt.

EXTERIOR OF SELF FEEDER.

Frozen Meat.

Fresh meat may, as all farmers know, be kept a long time if thoroughly frozen. It should, however, be hung in pure, cold air until a thaw comes, when it should be at once cooked or salted. Freezing the meat has opened its pores to air, and so soon as this begins to be tainted putrefaction soon sets in. Hence the pork that has once frozen through is harder to keep than that which was packed when only the animal heat was out of it.

IRISH CATTLE.

They Are Said to Be Well Adapted to the South.

A correspondent of The Breeder's Gazette says that there is one breed of cattle that is worthy of the attention of the southern cattlemen in quest of an animal of dual character, and they may be suitable to the possibilities of their country—a breed that has extraordinary powers alike of milk and meat production, with capacity to live and thrive where other breeds have degenerated. The breed is the Kerry and Dexter cattle of Ireland, which, while they have never been exploited in this country, are very favorably known in South Africa, South America and the antipodes—a breed that is able to maintain its excellence in environments that have probably a more extended range of climate and food than any other alien breed has tried. Their popularity seems to increase as their very valuable characteristics are better known. They are hardy of constitution, abundant milk producers and ready fatteners, with a prime quality of meat, small joints and a great proportion of lean that ought to be popular with consumers of beef in the south. Red Rose, a Dexter cow, gave in nine months over 15 times her own weight—750 pounds—of milk. Babrahom Belle, a Kerry cow, won the first prize in class of milking cows of any breed under 1,100 pounds weight in 1893 at Wornick, with a yield of 51 pounds and 8 ounces of milk for one day, her own weight being 890 pounds. Both of these records were above the standard of 12 per cent solids and 3 per cent butter fat. At Smithfield and Birmingham, those great fat stock shows, the Kerrys and Dexters compete in the class for small cattle, steers limited to 1,100 pounds and cows 1,000 pounds, and demonstrate their value as profitable beef producers by winning the prizes open to other small breeds.

It is to be hoped that the progressive southern breeders who are interested in bettering their cattle for a dual purpose may be induced to investigate the economic advantages of these hardy little animals. There is certainly a place for them in the live stock husbandry of the sunny south.

Big Head in Horses.

It is well to know that no cases of "big head" have appeared in this country among the many thousands of horses brought in from America, says the London Live Stock Journal. This most insidious disease—the origin and treatment of which have baffled the most eminent practitioners to discover—was first encountered in the neighborhood of New York, Staten Island and New Jersey being particularly unfortunate in possessing cases. Whether it be contagious or not is doubtful, but the probability is that it is so. There is no pain or serious inconvenience to the sufferer beyond a dullness and loss of appetite, the chief symptoms being an enormous increase of size and swelling between the muzzle and eyes on the top of the face, and this is accompanied by constant scouring. It is curious, however, to notice how the bones of the animals attacked by big head become affected, as this disease has the effect of rendering them both brittle and porous, cases having been known in which the cannon bones have snapped when the animals have been made to move fast. The most commonly accepted theory that is held to account for the prevalence of the disease is that some pollution of the land exists, and various dressings have been experimented with in the hope that the disease will be stamped out. Some of these are believed to have been successful, as cases of big head have become less frequent. Still the mysterious nature of the epidemic has baffled the experts who have studied it in all its phases.

Homing Instinct.

The "homing instinct," or the inward power which impels creatures of what we are pleased to term the lower order to make for the spot round which their affections are intwined is peculiarly strong in some animals and birds. It is well known that mountain sheep have the strongest liking for the hills on which they were lambed and grazed. The instinct was taken advantage of in the days when fences were few and far between. Men might come and men might go, but the sheep stocks of each grazing remained. They were of peculiar value over and above the fact that they were acclimatized because they would not as a group or lot wander away and get mixed with other flocks on neighboring grazings. In these days, when boundary fences are the rule almost everywhere, the "homing instinct" does not go for much, but valuations from tenant to tenant continue, and, so to say, do reverence to the "old order."—London Live Stock Journal.

Age In Sows.

A young sow never makes a first large litter. When she grows older, if she proves a good breeder, she may have 15 or more pigs at a birth and be able to take care of them all. The litters that are too large are apt to be not over seven or eight, and the young sow, growing herself, cannot furnish milk enough for them. It always seems a pity to kill a young pig in spring, but if there are any runts among the litter it is better to destroy them and concentrate the feeding on those that will make the best use of all they get. If a young sow has five thrifty pigs, they will be worth more at the end of the season, and so, too, will the sow, than if she had more. The pigs from young sows should be taught to eat as early as possible, so as to be less drain upon the dam.—Live Stock.

Importance of Salt.

The important part that salt plays in the animal economy should never be lost sight of. This mineral is an important constituent of the blood, and if any animal is deprived of it loss of appetite and an unthrifty condition follow

STATE ROADS BUILT DURING THE SEASON OF 1898.

Effect of the State System Has Been to Stimulate Cities and Towns to Build Good Roads—Repair of Highways.

Work on the system of state highways closed practically for the year before Dec. 1. The great storm of Nov. 27 put an end to all outdoor operations. A review of the year shows that the new length in 1898 has been [illegible] miles, making a total of 266 thus far finished in the state system. The total number of miles laid out and contracted for is 282.66. The remaining 16.80 miles are in process of construction and are mostly finished. The number of miles built in recent years is as follows: In 1894 the number was 8.83; in 1895 it was 50.08; in 1896 it was 37.63, and in 1897 it was [illegible]. The amount of money available for construction was $100,000 less than in 1897. In that year the appropriation was $800,000, with the provision that only $600,000 should be used in that season and that $200,000 should pass over to 1898. For 1898 the appropriation was $400,000, with the provision that $100,000 of it should not be available until 1899. This makes this year's available sum $500,000 against $600,000 last year. It is the desire of the commission that there be a regular annual appropriation in order that the work may be pushed systematically, with assurance that at least a certain amount will be constructed every season.

It has been the policy of the commission to add to the sections already built rather than branch off into the construction of new, short pieces. This has resulted in the development of [illegible] pieces so that the near future will see long stretches of road where the line is continuously of the improved sort.

During the year the highway commission has paid particular attention to the expediency of building narrower road than has been the practice hitherto. Thus far the standard has been a roadbed 15 feet wide, with three feet of gravel shoulder on each side, increasing in width near centers of population where the volume of traffic was larger. But the studies of this year have convinced every member of the commission that it will serve the ordinary purpose if the roadbed is only 12 feet wide, or even ten in some instances. They have built one of ten feet in Truro and one of 12 in West Tisbury. Each of these is satisfactory to the people. They feel the need in that sandy part of the state of more length of hard road, and they are willing to sacrifice width for length. The narrower width is found to be sufficient in a country where there is little passing of loaded teams or where the travel is mostly in one direction in the morning and in the other at night. When light vehicles turn out occasionally into the sand, it does not hurt the finished roadbed. In cases where there is heavy teaming it is proposed to make occasional turnouts, so that by brief waiting there would be the benefit of hard roads all the way and much more length than is possible if the road is built up to the first standard.

Study has been made for low cost road for the Cape, where sand abounds, and a mixture of clay, sand and broken stone is found to answer well. The clay and sand together make a kind of mortar which prevents the surfacing of broken stone from sinking into the sand beneath. A road of this sort has been built for $2,600 per mile, while the average cost of the macadam roads in the state system up to the end of the season of 1897 was $5,700 per mile. But 80 per cent of these roads had the telford foundation of large broken stone placed by hand as a basis for the macadam surfacing.

It is said in behalf of the commission that all the road which has been built under the state system is as good now as when it was built. It is kept in constant repair. Some resident engineer or other official goes over the state road frequently, noting its condition, and the repairs are kept up so that the road is always in first class shape. Careful records are kept of the manner and expense of repairs, in order that the state may know just what is to be done, but thus far no figures have been given of the regular annual cost per mile to maintain the state roads. In France, where the government roads are about one-tenth of the total mileage, the annual cost of maintenance is from $80 to $100 per mile.

The effect of the state system has been to stimulate cities and towns to undertake similar work in their own behalf, so that the roads of the state as a whole are much better in consequence of the introduction of the state system. No fewer than 25 towns were known to do this before 1898, and eight have been added to the list this year. They have appropriated from $3,000 to $70,000 each for first class roadbeds and the improvement in their vicinity has been marked. The demand for road building by the state continues as strong as ever. The system seems as popular as when it was first introduced, though the people are learning not to petition for as long sections of state road, but to limit their request to what it is probable they will secure. In the next few years many of the gaps existing as a consequence of the plan of building short sections in different towns will be closed up and the public will enjoy the benefit of continuous first class highway. It is said that if the appropriation of $500,000 per year were continued regularly for ten years it would make a great difference with the state system and make it seem more than ever a practical concern to the people.

Abolish Both.

Narrow tires and mud roads should speedily be sent hand in hand, as it were, "glimmering through the dream of things that were."

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOL. XVI. NO. 12 THIEF RIVER FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1899. TERMS $1.50 IN ADVANCE.

A SETTLEMENT

And a Just One Is All Red Lake County Wants.

The Crookston Times is very much excited all on account of the fact that Senator Myran, at the request of many Red Lake county citizens, has introduced a bill which would settle up the affairs of Polk and Red Lake county. Here is what the Times has to say:

Among the many woodchucks that have been dug out of the ground under the foundation of many of the bills introduced during the present session of the legislature none have been more carefully concealed, not have they shown up after being brought to the clear light of day with greater transparency than has one which appears in the last section of a bill introduced by Senator Myran of the district which includes Red Lake county. This bill is known as senate file No. 533 and was introduced by Senator Myran on Saturday last and referred to the committee on towns and counties.

The measure is clearly in the interests of Red Lake county which, as is well known was detached from Polk county at the general election in 1896, under the provisions of Chapter 143 of the general laws of Minnesota for the year 1893. This provided that in making a division of property between counties all moneys on hand or to be collected from delinquent taxes for county purposes, together with penalties and interest on all taxes, should be retained by the old county and that detached territory would not share therein, the said detached territory being entitled only to a proportionate share of the appraised value of the real estate, buildings, office fixtures, etc.

Under the law and provisions named, a division of Polk county was made in 1896, whereby the territory now known as Red Lake county was detached. A subsequent appraisement of such property was made by a commission, duly selected by process of law consisting of Ezra G. Valentine, Wilkin Co., J. H. Sutherland, Becker Co. and A. Grindeland, Marshall Co.

This commission viewed the property carefully, in all its details, and submitted a report placing the value of the property at $32,800.

A final settlement on the basis of this appraisement has been studiously avoided on the part of Red Lake county, with the evident purpose, as now appears, to secure exactly the woodchuck legislation that is embraced and contained in the bill referred to above.

The bill is a voluminous document, framed with much verbiage to conceal its real intent. Its main points are provisions to the effect that all funds on hand at the date of division and all moneys collected from delinquent taxes on county levies and all penalties and interest on all delinquent taxes, shall revert proportionally to the detached territory, and to make the laws specially applicable to Polk and Red Lake counties, a retroactive section is appended to the bill.

Here's where the woodchuck is secreted, and the Red Lakers hope to get in their graft. It reads this way, mark it well:

"Provided further, that all the provisions of this act shall apply to counties in this state heretofore divided and set off, under the provisions of Chapter 143, of the general laws of 1893, but in which no final settlement has yet been made, as well as the counties hereafter divided, created and set off."

Herein is shown in the twinkling of an eye the reason why Red Lake county has never desired a final settlement of the accounts between her and Polk county.

The people up there have bided their time. They elected Senator Myran, it is fair to persume, under the direct promise and pledge that he would introduce and cause to be passed this very bill. This accounts for the unexpectedly large vote by which Senator Myran carried Red Lake county. Whether or not his heart is in his work in this matter is not to be considered. Senator Myran is merely discharging an obligation. In short he is paying an election debt, one of the sort that cannot be listed among the legitimate expenses which he filed as a requirement incident to his election, but which he feels in honor bound to pay.

The managers of the county division proposition in Red Lake county were thoroughly familiar with all the requirements of the law under which they were detached from Polk county. They were entirely satisfied therewith. They should in honor gracefully conform to the legal conditions then existing. This law as the basis of the campaign for division which they made, and upon which they were were successful, and to the legal conditions then existing may be attributed the fact that they were permitted existence. Had there been any idea that subsequent legislation such as is now proposed would be attempted, the will of the people as expressed at the polls at that time would have been recorded as emphatically against division under all circumstances.

A woodchuck of such huge proportions cannot escape the notice of a watchful legislator, and in all probability its existence will be very brief. It will likely meet its just fate at the hands of the committee which will find a quiet place for its repose in some dark pigeon hole.

Financial Condition of County.

The following figures from the abstract of the March settlement of the county auditor treasurer shows the financial condition of county to be very gratifying and that instead of being bankrupt, as was publicly stated not long since, we have a cash balance of $19,462.26, distributed as follows:

Town	$2,389.33.
City	2,746.38.
School	8,386.68.
State	1,338.10.
County Revenue	2,898.16.
County Poor	844.04.
County Bond and Interest	386.07.
County Road and Bridge	441.70.

All outstanding orders are paid except those drawn on the revenue fund, and all revenue orders presented before Feb. 15, 1898, are payable under this settlement.—Red Lake County Courier.

Developments out East.

Richardson & Halvorson, known as the Red Lake Transportation Co., are building a trestle out into Red Lake to be used in landing the timber now being put in the lake within reach of the tug boats. They are also building a tug boat to be used in towing the logs across the lake. The company expects to log the greater part of the summer—a new era in lumbering. The company now has twelve miles of standard gauge railroad built, reaching from Red Lake, five miles east of the Agency, to Nebish, a village in Beltrami county.—It is expected that the Brainard & Northern will connect with this road the coming season.

Horse Race on Red Lake River.

Yesterday afternoon the long expected trotting race between the J. A. Bray and Adolph Dufault fast horses was pulled off and a large crowd of citizens gathered on the ice on the Red Lake river to witness the sport. The start was made at 3 o'clock and Dufault's horse lead of winning the first heat. The second heat was also credited to his nag. The third and fourth heats were won by Bray's horse. Then came the fifth and rubber. The Dufault horse had the lead for some distance, when, owing to some mishap about the harness, he was obliged to pull out and the race and purse of $35 was awarded to Bray, giving him the 3 out of 5 heats. Later the fifth heat was trotted over again and was won by Dufault.

Levi Milller was in the race for a time with his his speedy gray but was shut out for running.

Wm. Knoblauch, J. A. Mead and Eli Lasha acted as judges. No time was caught, owing to a lack of knowledge of the length of the track.—Red Lake County Courier.

Representative B. R. Wethern is proving himself a worker in the legislature.—Red Lake County Courier.

What kind of a "worker" do you mean?

Crookston has an election on April 3, and two of its most prominent citizens, A. D. Stephens and Halvor Steenerson, are candidates for mayor. To an outsider it looks as if the latter had the best chance of success.

The St. Paul Dispatch throws this deserved bouquet at our senator:

"Senator Myran is being generally congratulated by his collegues and constituents on his success in pushing through his drainage bill. No bill carrying so large an appropriation has ever had as easy sledding as this, especially with a legislature which was so proverbially penurious, and its success must be conceded as due to the personal popularity of Senator Myran, supported as he has been throughout by Senator Grindeland and Ryder.

The legislature has created three nice elective offices that are liable to put something of a figure in the combinations next year. The railroad commissioners are henceforth to be elected by the people, and they are nice pleasant positions with comfortable salary attachments, and a four year term. They are positions that require something of a judicial temperament, good stiff backbone and incorruptible character. The people of the state owe it to themselves to make good selections for these places and prove that they are capable of doing so. Whether it is a fact that the politicians have not got on to the fact that these are elective offices, I cannot say, but it is singular that there are no pronounced candidates out for them. There is plenty of time, however, and it would be better, in my judgment, if the office sought the man in these cases rather than vice versa.—A. N. Dare in the Elk River Star News.

Upon the character of the seed depends to a very great extent, the character of the crop. Good seed will not always produce a good crop, but it will always produce a better crop than poor seed under like conditions. Good seed costs more than poor seed, but the additional cost is so small that it is not worthy of consideration in view of the benefit to be derived from its use. The quality of the grain itself is not the only thing to be considered. Seed grain may be plump and hard. It may possess high germinating powers, and be capable of producing a strong, healthy plant, and still be unfit for use owing to the admixture of foul seeds which it contains. The man who sows weed seeds on his farm is sowing trouble for himself and his successors, and may, in one season, do damage which the labor of a generation will not repair. The farmer, therefore, should select, not merely sound wheat, but pure wheat.—Grand Forks Herald.

W. A. Barto, of Sauk Centre, youngest son of Gov. Barto, of this city, has just sold his homestead in the Red Lake country. Five years ago Mr. Barto took a homestead in the section of the country but then opened to settlement and he was located on a quarter-section containing a valuable tract of land. Just how valuable it has proven to be is evidenced by the terms of sale which are for a $6,000 cash payment for the land and the pine. Mr. Barto is still a young man—scarcely more than 26—and this is a pretty penny for him. He is a member of a Sauk Centre hardware firm.—St. Cloud Journal-Press.

The following, taken from an exchange, is now going the rounds and it contains some good advice:

"We heard a couple of town 'doods' make some disparaging remarks yesterday, concerning a farmer who was upon the streets and whose pants were not fresh from the tailor's press and whose shoes were of a different pattern from those worn by the critics. You poor, puffed-up imbeciles! Do you know who the farmer is? He is the man who moves the world. If he were to go on a strike and refuse to raise a crop for a single year, the effect would be more disastrous than would result if all the railroad men, all the miners and all the trade unions combined were to quit. With his glittering share and with his clinking binder, the farmer toils on, furnishing subsistance for the whole world and without his prosperity, the goods would rot on the merchants' shelves, and there would result a paralysis of business on land and sea. The man, though above the average in intelligence, is dressed in homespun, and if he has any shining equipments, it is not a paste diamond ring, but a 14-inch plow-share, hidden under six inches of mother earth. Stop when you are about to speak derisively of a farmer, and consider, and see if you are not able to realize that the country and its citizens depend more upon the farmer in his working clothes than upon the poolroom 'dood' whose pocket knoweth not the weight of a dime."

TO CURE TYPHOID FEVER.

How to Combat the Disease Without Use of Medicine.

The following is a brief account of the methods employed by Dr. H. A. Meltzer, Leipsic, Germany, in the treatment of typhoid fever. He gives no medicines of any kind, relying solely on nature's materia medica. Consequently his patients (whom he always cures) are not injured by taking drug poisons. Dr. Meltzer says:

"I have had many typhoid fever patients and have never lost one. A number of these were treated by drug physicians before they came to me and had been given up to die. Nevertheless I succeeded in curing them. The treatment that I administered was as follows:

"First, and most important, I cool down the fever; the intense heat must be reduced. I give, as needed, three or four baths every 24 hours, these varying according to the age and condition of the patient. The temperature of the bath should be 18 to 20 degrees R. or about 73 to 77 degrees F., and the patient is frequently sponged and rubbed with cool, tepid water. I also apply cool or cold compresses (body wrapping) over the liver and spleen, on the head or wherever the heat is intense, allowing the patient plenty of cold water to drink. Injections, cool or cold, are given from the start. I let the patient sleep all he can, his bed being by an open window.

"When the fever runs high and the patient's strength is good, I administer the full wet sheet pack. If he feels comfortable in it, the treatment is all right. But if he becomes nervous or restless the wrappings must be removed and the skin rubbed with a towel. The feelings of the patient will decide as to the use of the pack. I likewise employ the half bath, rubbing the feet, legs and back while the patient is in it. This should be continued until the surface heat is lowered.

"Whether it is typhoid or some other fever, it is of little consequence so far as the treatment is concerned. It is sickness or disease that we are treating, and the name of the fever is immaterial. For patients that are very weak I give the pouring bath, using water that is quite cold, sometimes 8 degrees R.—about 50 degrees F. The water is poured over the head and shoulders, provided the patient can stand it; otherwise omit the head and simply pour it over the upper part of the body.

"By my treatment the patient is not only made comfortable, but he recovers rapidly. When he gets hungry, I give him fruit to eat, apple sauce, Graham bread and milk, mush and milk, etc."

How to Prepare Salted Peanuts.

These are good, cheap and easily prepared. Buy 15 cents' worth of the raw peanuts, shell, pour boiling water over them and let them stand for five minutes. Drain, then rub off the skins very carefully. Put the peanuts in a bread pan, pour over them a tablespoon of melted butter and a half teaspoon of salt. Bake until a delicate brown in a rather slow oven. Shake them often to insure evenness of color.

How to Boil Lobsters.

Drop them into a kettle of boiling water while they are alive and let them boil from 15 to 20 minutes, according to their size. (Do not boil a lobster longer than 20 minutes, as it will become watery and tasteless.) Lift them from the kettle as soon as they are done. Drop them in cold water just a second. Then put them in a cool place to drain. Just as soon as they are cool enough to handle split them down the back and crack the claws and stand them in a cool, dry place till ready to serve. Opening them so soon after boiling frees them from gas and keeps the meat firm and sweet, while, if allowed to remain in the shell unopened, the meat of a lobster will begin to decompose very soon and become unfit to eat.

How to Make Fish Pudding.

One pound of cooked fish, one pound of boiled potatoes, one ounce of butter, two eggs, salt and pepper; melt the butter, stir in the chopped fish and mashed potatoes and bind with beaten egg, grease a tin and put mixture on in the shape of a fish, brush over with beaten egg, sprinkle with crumbs and bake half an hour. A most delicious way for using cooked fish.

How to Set the Table.

Have something green for a centerpiece.

A growing plant is better in many ways than cut flowers. Have as many forks at each plate as there are "soft" dishes, which include fish, vegetables and pastry, and as many knives as there are meats, butter included. Water in a decanter or carafe is cleaner and easier to serve than in a pitcher. A "cover" includes a plate of any size or design to protect the table from the steaming hot soup course, from two to five forks, between two and four knives, a couple of teaspoons, a water goblet and wineglasses, napkin and a bread and butter plate.

How to Prepare Savory Steak.

Have 1½ pounds of bladebone steak cut very thin and in one slice, season with a half teaspoonful of salt, quarter of pepper; rub a tablespoonful of butter into four of bread crumbs, then add a small onion parboiled and chopped very fine and a half teaspoonful of powdered sage. Stir in a tablespoonful of milk to bind it. Spread this over the meat, roll up and fasten with a string. Roast in brisk oven, basting well with two tablespoonfuls of melted butter.

How to Make Lip Salve.

Olive oil, four ounces; alkanet root, one ounce; macerate with heat until the oil is well colored. Then add spermaceti, one-half ounce; white wax, two ounces; prepared suet, three ounces, and a little sugar. When nearly cold, stir in orange flower water, one-quarter dram; attar of roses, two or three drops.

FADS IN BREEDING.

Essentials Often Lost Sight of in Passing Fancies.

In the enthusiasm of youth there is a tendency to catch at novelties, says L. N. Barbour in The Breeder's Gazette. The origin of the Shorthorn cattle in the valley of the Tees and in the hands of such farmers as the Collings tells the value of environment and persistency along well defined lines. The evolution of the Poland-China hog in the Miami valley under the encouragement of the Cincinnati packing industry shows how one leading purpose brought many strong men to the work of producing the animal that could most cheaply condense corn, clover, grass and mast into sound pork.

So long as the early breeders of Shorthorns and Poland-Chinas were bent on the one prime object of producing animals of the beef and pork type they cared little for color. But after these breeds became noted and were sought by stockmen in other lands and states and their superiority as meat producers was well fixed and recognized they became the subjects of speculation. Then speculators and importers and showmen began to solicit for sale and to mate in hope of catching the eye of the inexperienced. Then came crazes for color and finish to please the showman. The color craze has furnished us many examples of sacrificing the profitable growthy feeder for the neat and fancy colored beast.

After the experience of the multitude has agreed upon the type, characteristics and markings of a well established breed then is the period when the imitations get in their work. The breed is popular, and if by any new claim or touch more sales can be made the sterling value of the breed will not stand in the way.

The careful work of record societies in defining type and points has done much to save the breeds of value from demoralization by experimenters and speculators who have done nothing toward the improvement of any breed further than that by chance they may have helped some one more conveniently to purchase a breeding animal. No breed owes much to or has ever been improved by those who have trusted to picking up here and there animals that fit their fancy. The trial of a short cut to secure that which only years of patient skill can produce will not bring success.

The boomers have never been founders of herds that have been noted for individuality and uniformity of quality. Their fad has been a fashionable pedigree or a fancy ear or twist of the tail. Among horsemen of America we have a sad illustration of the speed craze. The fad for a fast one led men to lose sight of form, color, substance and beauty. If a stallion could get a record a little lower than any other in the neighborhood, he was used for breeding regardless of his form, color, style, substance or quality. The color craze among breeders of cattle and swine has done little damage to the breeding interests and profits of feeding compared with the losses arising from the senseless fad among farmers and horsemen for speed among trotters.

We know of no breed of farm stock of which fads have not lessened the value in the end. The dairymen even are getting on to thin ice in their fad for the dairy type. It too often is but the evidence of weakness of the lung power and lack of vigor. The dairy type of some enthusiasts who write much and are heard at every gathering of dairymen and farmers is akin to the lankness and leanness of the ideal bacon pig—that is the fad that the cry for lean meat would make leanness a test of worth.

Cattle Ships.

The accommodations for cattle on board a modern ship are luxurious in contrast with the cruelty and suffering attendant on their shipment in the early days of the trade. Their fodder is of the finest quality, their stalls are as comfortable as they can be made and are lighted by electric light. With this greater care for the comfort of the beasts has come a largely reduced loss in transit. In this particular direction the war has brought about one salutary reform. The first steamer sent to Cuba lost in transit from 10 to 88 head. This loss, it is said, was caused by the loading of the cattle into the steamers by hoisting them with rope and pulley, the pulley being hooked into a rope around the base of the horns of the animal, allowing the whole weight to be held up by the horns. This barbarous practice has been discontinued, and all the steamers in the trade have ports large enough to allow of driving the cattle through them. Since the loading by hoisting was abandoned the loss of cattle in transit has been very small.—Chicago Record.

MUTTON SHEEP.

Notable Increase in Small Flocks Throughout the Country.

Mutton has become and is fast growing in esteem, says a writer in Colman's Rural World, so that though the wool production is yet largely considered mutton is also a great item in sheep raising; hence, with both wool and mutton as paying productions, the sheep industry has largely increased, and many hundreds of small flocks are now found in the middle west and eastern states where sheep have virtually been unknown for years. In the south, also, sheep breeding has been receiving much more attention than formerly. Flocks of common, uncared for animals have been improved by the introduction of better blood. The success met with during the past two years has caused the addition of hundreds of small flocks in all these sections where it has been held that sheep could not be profitably bred.

These changes in sheep raising, though so great, are in fact only the beginning. The consumption of mutton, the most healthful of meats, is certain to increase. The farmer will learn that, for his own family, mutton is the cheapest and best meat for his table and that there will be a continued growing demand for mutton in his local market. Every butcher shop in every village and town will keep it for sale as they have been keeping beef and pork in its season, so that for the surplus, or in cases of need of a little money, a market for this product can always be had. Mutton, with the addition of wool, makes the sheep extraordinarily profitable, so that we may soon expect to see many small flocks of sheep as well as cattle, hogs and poultry.

The farmer that now wishes to enter this field of industry may, with little capital, secure good common or native ewes and a pure bred ram of one of the mutton breeds. Careful breeding and attention will give him a money saving, money making source of revenue better, perhaps, than any ever before engaged in.

Animals and the Weather.

The students of animal life have been provided with exceptional opportunities this winter, owing to the constant variations of weather, for observing the attention paid by members of the dumb creation to the premonitory warnings of an approaching storm which are recognized by them, though unintelligible to mankind. Quite recently, in Essex, says the London Live Stock Journal, in spite of the fact that the weather was unusually genial for the time of the year, whole flocks of fieldfares entered a secluded and well sheltered park, while countless mallard and teal came up from the seacoast and took refuge on the lake. Eels deserted the mud at the bottom of this sheet of water, and numerous jack were to be seen close to the surface, a certain sign that a change in the state of the weather for the worse might be expected. It is curious to note, too, the behavior of the sea gulls, which seem to have permanently taken up their abode near the great London bridges when heavy weather is at hand, as the evident uneasiness of the birds is a sure sign of a change. Indeed, observant people make it a practice of watching their movements and making arrangements accordingly. Why the power of acting as an animated barometer should be permitted to the lower order of creation and denied to man is one of those mysteries that can never be unraveled, though unquestionably it exists upon the basis of self preservation. But at the same time there can be no gainsaying the fact that a general knowledge of the habits of such creatures would prove most valuable to the human race.

Sugar For Horses.

All horses can easily be taught to like sugar. It is a nutritious food, though fattening rather than strength giving, and when the horses are at work only a little should be given, and that rather as an appetizer than as food. It will cause the horse to have a very shiny coat. When a horse has learned to like sugar, he can be easily caught at pasture, for he will grow as fond of sugar as a little child is of sweets. But the condiment should not be given in sufficient quantities to serve as a substitute for more nutritious foods, and it is better to give sugar in cold weather than in summer, because the carbon, which constitutes the whole value of sugar, is soon transmuted into animal warmth by the digestive process. Feeding sugar in hot weather causes horses to sweat easily if at work, and they soon run down and become poor.—Boston Cultivator.

Demand For Horses.

The very best kind of horses are in urgent demand now and sell at remunerative prices. In 1893 there were 18,206,800 horses reported in the United States and in 1898 only 15,960,910, showing a decline of 2,305,890 head in six years. Horses reached about their lowest level in 1897, when the average price was reported at less than $40 per head. In 1898 values were improved quite a good deal. Small, unsound, ill shaped horses are numbered with the past. Good size is demanded in all classes. The best profits will undoubtedly come to the raiser from such animals as exporters want and the best domestic trade demands.—Live Stock.

Feeding Smutty Corn.

Whenever you come to a smutty ear of corn put it in the fire. This should have been done at husking time, but some smut may have been overlooked then and developed since. If all farmers would stamp out the corn smut wherever found the disease could soon be eradicated. Feeding it to either cows or hogs, as is often done, is the readiest way to send it to the manure pile, where it will propagate very rapidly. Besides, it is a serious danger to the animals to which it is fed, especially if they are bearing young.—Boston Cultivator.

NEW JERSEY HIGHWAYS.

Review of the Progress of Roadmaking in the State.

State Road Commissioner Budd of New Jersey in his annual report reviews road building in New Jersey under the state aid law during the last year, together with comments and recommendations. The number of miles of roads built last year under the state aid law was 85, nearly all of which were of stone. This brings up to 823 the mileage of permanent roads constructed since the state began contributing toward the cost of road building, and does not include the roads built by counties and townships without state aid. Eighty-five miles of stone roads were built in New Jersey last year.

HARD ON ALL CONCERNED.

The total cost of roads constructed under the state aid law since its passage in 1893 has been $565,826. Not one cent of this aid has gone to Bergen, Cape May, Cumberland, Hudson, Hunterdon, Ocean, Sussex, Union or Warren county. The roads now petitioned for have a mileage of 426, and it is estimated that it will cost to construct them $1,472,429.12. The state's share of this cost would be $500,000, so that under the annual appropriation of $100,000 it would take five years before all these roads could be built. Mr. Budd suggests that the annual appropriation be increased to $300,000.

The commissioner says that in the absence of an extra appropriation the state aid should be limited to those counties that have already done much stone road building, as it will permit the completion of a system of roads that lead from big centers. So far as possible the road building has been done so as to connect towns, and now there is practically a continuous improved road from Atlantic City to Jersey City. There is also a network of roads running from Camden, Trenton, Newark and other centers.

The system of frequently changing county engineers on account of their politics Mr. Budd condemns as bad. It results in expensive experiments. There are eight counties, says Mr. Budd, that retain their engineers, regardless of politics.

INCOME TAX FOR ROADS.

Good Roads Measure Proposed In the Missouri General Assembly.

Senator Farris recently introduced a joint and concurrent resolution to the Missouri general assembly which provides that at the general election in November, 1900, there shall be submitted for adoption to the voters of the state the following constitutional amendment:

"That for the construction and maintenance of the public roads and highways, bridges and culverts in the various counties in this state and for the construction and maintenance of public streets, alleys, bridges and culverts in the incorporated cities and towns of the state the general assembly shall have power by appropriate legislation to levy and collect an annual income tax not to exceed $10 on $1,000 on all gross incomes in excess of $5,000 for any one year of all persons and business in the state, from which an income is derived, which tax when collected shall be annually appropriated as follows:

"To each county, incorporated city and town in the state in proportion to the number of inhabitants of such county, incorporated city and town, to be ascertained by the last general census taken under the authority of the state or of the United States."

New York's Road Progress.

The state of New York will pay $84,517.73 as a result of the operations of the Fuller road improvement law enacted by the legislature in 1898. The purpose of the act was to furnish a substitution of the "money" for the "day labor" system in the improvement of roads by towns of the several counties of the state. This law provides that where a town raises a certain sum of money for road improvement purposes the state shall give to the town a sum equal to 25 per cent of the amount raised by it. The reports of the state comptroller show that to date 43 towns in eight counties have raised under the money tax plan $188,070.96, and now demand of the state the 25 per cent guaranteed under the Fuller state aid law, or $84,517.73.

Broad Tires and Good Roads.

In France when they set about making good roads wide tires were insisted on in the case of all country wagons, and some of them are so constructed that the outer mark of the 6 inch front wheel just meets the inner mark of the 6 inch hind wheel, thus making a 12 inch track of both and turning the wagon as it moves into a sort of road roller on a small scale. With this hint we leave the matter to the further consideration of all concerned.—Brooklyn Citizen.

For Road Improvement.

The business men of Bucyrus, O., have organized for the purpose of adopting a system for improving the roads in that vicinity.

Bad Roads.

Highways which are rendered impassable by ordinary rains—and there are many of them—are not fit to be called roads.

FROM MANILA

A Letter From W. B. Fuller of 13th Minn. Vol.

James Meehan, Jr., last week received the following interesting letter from W. B. Fuller, a former resident of this city, who is at present at Manila with the 13th Minnesota Volunteers:

MANILA, Feb. 15, 1899.

As mail is expected to leave for the U. S. this P. M., I will scribble you a few lines in reply to your kind letter which I received some time since but have neglected replying partly on account of the exciting times which we have been experiencing here of late.

Of course this letter will be very late news by the time it reaches you, and the papers will have published much better accounts of our scrapping with the Googos as we term the Filipinos, but thinking you migh like to hear an account of the affair from a participant, I will write you a brief description as I saw it. For months these natives under the leadership of Aguinaldo have been making themselves more insulting and obnoxious day by day, and have taken every effort of the Americans to preserve peace simply as an indication of weakness and fear, and have of course became bolder and convinced that the Americans were cowards, and that they could enter the city whenever they cared to make the attempt.

And strangely enough our officers had allowed them to go on and construct the strongest entrenchments around the city, and it was also well known that they had in some way become possessed of several peices of modern artillery all this making the situation a decidedly a grave one.

Our principal safeguard lay in the fact that our lines extended around the city in a semi-circle, both wings resting upon the bay in such a way that nearly our whole length of line could be protected by the guns of Dewey's fleet, in fact but for the aid rendered by his guns and even more by his powerful search-lights which disclosed every movement made by the Googos. It is quite likely that they would have broken through our lines in the wild rush with which they came upon us shortly after 10 P. M. on the night of Feb. 4, after this first desperate charge which was made simultaneously along our whole front, when they hoped to surprise us at some weak point and get into the city, but in which they were disappointed and repulsed with terrible slaughter. Things were comparatively quiet until morning the Googos doing lots of shooting from their trenches but our men lying quietly behind ours and not replying, but just at daylight the scene changed and from that time on during most of Sunday one might have easily imagined that he had dropped down into the infernal regions, for with the dawn a concerted attack was made upon the whole line of the Googos works and then the roar of volley after volley of rifles, the sharp rattle of rapid fire and machine guns and the scream of great shells rushing over our heads to burst miles inland wherever [illegible] of natives could be seen, while ever and anon above all could be heard the cheers of regiments of our boys as they drove the Googos back from trench to trench, and finally back out of their works entirely and into their villages of native huts which were at once set on fire, when the roaring flames formed a wall of fire around the city and the clouds of dense black smoke almost obscured the sun, the whole making a scene so terifically grand as to be impossible to describe. By Sunday night the Googos were driven back several miles in all directions and their dead lay in piles and winrows. On Monday a sharp engagement took place at the water works pumping station 10 miles out to the east which was captured by the Nebraska and Tennessee boys with the Utah batteries. The natives had attempted to damage the machinery and were but slightly successful, and we had the water running again within 48 hours.

During the next few days but little fighting was done, the Googos fleeing before our troops in all directions and owing to the fact that they out numbered us 10 to 1, it was thought advisable not to extend our lines too rapidly. Also a halt had to be called for burying the dead Googos and transporting supplies to the front. On Friday, however, they were found massed at the village of Caloocan, about 8 miles to the north of Manila, and on Friday afternoon this place was carried, after the sharpest engagement (while it lasted) of the war, it being a very strong natural position, and almost unaccessable to Dewey's guns, on account of which it may be termed a victory for the infantry alone, and was in fact carried by a series of rushes and charges which the Googos could not stand up against. From this place they have retreated back into the city of Malabon, about 2 miles farther north. This place is almost inaccessable to an attack from the landward as it is surrounded or nearly so by swamps. Dewey can reach it with his guns, however, and we have been expecting him to open up every day since, but for some reason he has deferred the attack. It is rumored that there are a number of English people in the city held by the insurgents, and a vast amount of property owned by English firms which, of course, would all be destroyed in event of a bombardment, and that this is the reason the attack has been delayed. There are thousands of the Googos gathered in there, and when it is taken it will be only after the most desperate engagement of the war, unless they come to their senses and lay down their arms.

These natives have practiced the most appalling barbarities. In several instances one or two of our boys have been found nailed to walls and trees literally crucified and hacked to peices. These were a few boys who had ventured too far outside the lines and were surprised and surrounded by the wretches. Fortunately this has only happened in a few instances. All this has so infuriated our boys that very few wounded Googos or prisoners are being brought in, and of course, you know, what that signifies.

Now for a few words about the 13th. This regiment, as you know, has been doing the police work of the city which by the way has been the hardest and most onerous work done by any regiment of the island. For weeks we have been sleeping during the daytime, and on the alert at night, ready to instantly respond to any call or alarm sent in by our patrolls which are continually watching every suspicious locality and patrolling every street in the city.

It was feared by those highest in command that the most serious damage would be from a general uprising within the city, and the events of Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights proved that had the least carelessness been showed by the police the Googos would have been quick to have taken advantage of it. Every policeman in the city was on continuous duty during those days and nights and though dozens of attempts were made to start rioting as the Googos have arms and amunition secreted through the city, but a single call or rifle shot was the signal for a score of our boys to rush to the spot and the Springfield bullets sent the rats hustling into their holes.

Until now we have the greatest respect for an American soldier and his rifle, in fact it has become a saying that the boys of the 13th shoot their man and halt him afterwards. Since the first 3 days and nights the city has been comparatively quiet (although should the Googos gain any advantage over troops at the front we might expect plenty of trouble again) and our officers have been pleading to have us relieved in the city and sent to the front. Thus far, however, they have utterly refused to allow us to be relieved, but the temptation has been so great that many Minnesota boys watched an opportunity when they thought they would not be missed for a few hours, have skipped out to the front and took part in the firing for a while.

I took the chances myself, and with over 100 Minnesota boys from the different companies were in the charge with the Kansas regiment at the attack on and capture of Caloocan, and had a red hot time for about 2 hours. 4 Minnesota boys wounded. American loss was slight but you ought to have seen those Googos run, such of them as to keep out of our reach.

Must cut this letter short as mail closes shortly. Situation considered very critical, but I hope that by the time this reaches you that we will have the Googos whipped good, and that we can again be looking toward the time when we will be getting started for home.

Children are sometimes at a loss to distinguish the meaning of words having a similarity of sound. This was illustrated at school in East Grand Forks yesterday when the teacher asked a boy to give the meaning of the word pedagogue. "A pedagogue," replied the pupil, "is a place where Jews worship." Of course the answer threw the teacher's usual solemn expression out of gear and caused a titter to go round the school room.—East Grand Forks Courier.

A DRAW

The Wrestling Match Between Dainard and Olson.

A good sized crowd was present at Hamre's hall last Saturday evening to witness the wrestling match between J. A. Dainard, of St. Hilaire, and Ole Olson. The match was decided a draw, owing to the fact that the men failed to get together in the third round and the crowd became impatient. Olson was probably the better man of the two, but lacked the science which Dainard possessed, and it was hard for him to secure a fall. The first round was very short and Dainard succeeded in throwing Olson. The second round, however, was a long drawn out affair. Olson threw Dainard by sheer main strength four times, the last one being called three points down by Referee Hansen, although many were of the opinion that at least two of the other falls saw Dainard three points down. In the third round the men sparred for holds for a long time, until it was finally decided to call the match a draw. Then the two wrestled—just for fun—once side-hold and once back-hold. Olson succeeded in throwing Dainard both times. In a sparing match between the two which followed Dainard was the victor. All bets upon the mill were declared off.

Married.

Henry Houck and Miss Annie Ortloff, of this city, were united in marriage last Thursday evening, the Rev. Henry Logan officiating. Both are well known in this city and have the best wishes of many friends. They will make their home up at Shotley Brook, on the Red Lake, where the groom has a pine claim.

John Pederson and Miss Tilda Sorum, both of this city, were married last Saturday afternoon at Red Lake Falls. The bride is one of the popular young ladies of this city, being well known to all, and the groom is a popular lumberman. The NEWS extends congratulations.

THE NEWS,
By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Both military and naval officers who have recently returned from Manila say that the work of our soldiers there will be very much easier from this time on, because the topography of the country between their present lines and Malolos is very much more favorable for fighting than the swamp jungles and rice fields which lie back of them. The rest of the way they will have good roads and dry, solid ground to march on.

Gov. Roosevelt, of New York, in a message to the assembly of that state, gives some good advice. He says:

"Tax laws of this state are in an exceedingly unsatisfactory condition and I don't see how they can be put upon a just and wise basis save after careful investigation by legislative action. At present the farmers, the market gardeners and the mechanics and tradesmen having small holdings are paying an improper and excessive proportion of the general tax.

There is evident injustice in the light taxation of corporations. I have not the slightest sympathy with the outcry against corporations as such or against prosperous men of business, yet it remains true that a corporation which derives its powers from the state should pay to the state a just percentage of its earnings as a return for the privileges it enjoys. This should be especially true of the franchises bestowed upon gas companies, street railways and the like.

CARE OF WOUNDS.

How Serious Results May Be Avoided by Proper Care.

In these days, when detergents, antiseptics and cicatrizants are so abundant and are to be found in nearly every house, there ought to be no wounds due to violence which cannot be healed without the formation of pus. All wounds inflicted upon a person with no serious taint in his or her blood should be healed by first intention. In other words, the parts should unite at once, with but slight inflammation, with no formation of matter or tendency to remain sore.

The primary dressing of seemingly insignificant injuries and also of larger ones might be the means in a great many cases of preventing serious sequels, as septicemia, or blood poisoning, which so often jeopardizes life, and when once well advanced is almost uncontrollable.

I have treated a great many wounds, small and large, and I have never had pus or matter to form in the wounds, says Dr. W. H. Vail in St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

This is my primary dressing in all wounds except scalds and burns: I wash carefully with warm water and an antiseptic, using about one tablespoonful of the antiseptic to a pint of water. With absorbent cotton and this solution I cleanse the wound thoroughly from all extraneous matter. I place the torn parts in apposition, or stitch them if necessary. I then place a layer of cotton freely saturated with this lotion on the wound and bandage it there. This will insure protection from all external influences, as it forms a coating which hermetically seals the wound, no matter how large or small. At the same time it will prevent any of the poisonous material from passing into the blood and circulation, thus preventing systematic toxemia by destroying the poison at once and preserving the environing tissues and vessels. I employ the same dressing in bites of animals.

In burns I simply put on a thick layer of the gelatinous antiseptic and cover it with absorbent cotton. I have found nothing to equal the results.

If this primary precaution, which is a valuable means of assistance to both patient and physician, is given careful attention and rigorously adhered to, then many surgeons' bills will be avoided, much suffering prevented and many lives saved.

People who know that their blood is out of order, who are pale and anæmic, having a deficiency of red corpuscles, should always give injuries careful attention. If such persons receive a slight scratch or injury of any kind, they will notice that the wound will not heal readily.

How to Make Shrimp Fritters.

Make a batter of three well beaten eggs. Add to them a pinch of salt, quarter of a cup of milk and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Use one can of shrimps and chop them before stirring into the mixture with fine bread crumbs enough to make a stiff batter. Drop the mixture, by the spoonful, into boiling fat and fry to a light brown. Drain on paper and serve hot with Bechamel sauce poured around.

A BIG DEAL

P. & J. Meehan Sell to Wisconsin Parties

ALL THEIR PINE

Saw Mill and Other Interests in This Section.

One of the largest business transactions ever consummated in Northern Minnesota was made the first of the week in Thief River Falls. By the terms P. & J. Meehan sell to Charles J. Winton and David Winton, of Wausau, Wis., John O'Day, of Merrill, Wis., and John Daley, of Grand Rapids, Wis., all of their interests in this section. It includes about 80,000,000 feet of standing pine, 15,000,000 feet of logs, the saw and planing-mill plant, lumber yards and shore rights in this city, three steam boats, a lumber yard at Red Lake Falls, and all other horses, machinery and tools, in fact everything that P. & J. Meehan have in this section. The consideration is nearly a half a million of dollars. The deal was made by Charles Winton and John O'Day, who were in the city last week. They left Monday for Wisconsin, but will return the latter part of this week and take possession of the property.

The new owners already own a large amount of pine up this river, about 90,000,000, it is understood, which makes their holding of pine larger that any other firm doing business in this section. A stock company will be formed, which will probably be incorporated. Just who will be manager of the business in this city is as yet undecided, but it will probably be settled in a few days.

The Messrs. Meehans will remain here this summer and will deliver all the logs cut up at the Red Lake this summer to the mill in Thief River Falls. The lumber in the yards still belongs to them, and they will also dispose of that. Next fall they will probably leave the city for good and enjoy for the remaining part of their existence the fruits of their labor.

The new firm will operate the mill here during the coming season night and day and will saw up a large amount of lumber. It is to be hoped that all citizens of this place will cordially assist them in every possible way.

A Successful Term.

Miss Mary A. Wall closed a very successful term of school at Tweet last Friday. The closing exercises were attended by a large number of people and an interesting programme was rendred. Miss Wall has given excellent satisfaction and the school board unite in saying it was the most successful term of school ever had in that district. The number of pupils enrolled was 36, and the average daily attendance was 21.69. The number of scholars entitled to apportionment are 32.

No More Estimating.

The secretary of the interior has suspended the sale of Chippewa timber land advertised to take place May 10, and suspended the work of timber estimating. P. S. Ware, a former resident of this city, is one of the men let out of a job in this deal.

OUT OF A JOB

The City Attorney Is Discharged.

Mayor Dobner last week forced the city council to discharge the pet of its creation, F. Hibner, who in his sunshiney sweetness has doled out big chunks of law to the august city fathers for the past two years. It all happened this way: H. W. Lee has a case against the city which is now before the supreme court. Mr. Hibner persuaded the council to advance him $35, with which to pay his expenses to St. Paul, in order that he might go down and have the case dismissed. He got the $35, and served notice upon both Mr. Lee and the supreme court that he would argue the dismissal on November 28, 1899. Mr. Hibner in all probabilities meant March 28, for he gave Attorney Brown the biggest half of the $35, and sent him down last week to argue for the dismissal. Mr. Brown appeared on March 28, but found he was eight months ahead of time and consequently could do nothing.

Mr. Dobner, as mayor, refused to sign the warrant for the $35, until the council discharged Hibner, which was at once done.

Forage For Hogs.

"The Alfalfa Hog" opened up the whole subject of forage for stock. Personal experiences were given in regard to the relative merits of alfalfa, clover, sugar beets and sorghum as feed. Alfalfa was generally favored for hay, but as pasture on most soils it will kill out in a short time if hogs are turned on it. Dr. Peters of the state farm condemned alfalfa as feed for either horses or cattle. Experiments conducted there show that if eaten when damp it results in windbroken horses and bloated cows. Several valuable animals were lost. On the contrary, S. Andrews of Friend, who had both alfalfa and clover pastures, reported that he lost but one animal on alfalfa as against nine on clover. Where the two seeds are sown together hogs prefer the clover. As a forage plant sorghum was favored by several speakers.

Quick Work.

Thomas Kibon, proprietor of the Stroudsburg Woolen mills of Stroudsburg, Pa., recently had delivered to him a complete suit of clothing made from the wool of sheep whose fleeces were sheared only that morning. The world's record of eight hours, held in Scotland, was broken by one hour and 54 minutes. The suit was delivered to Mr. Kibon a few minutes before 1 o'clock, at his residence, and in a few minutes he was attired in it. Previous to Mr. Kibon lowering the world's record of from sheep to finished clothes it was held by a mill at Galashiels, Scotland, and the time was eight hours.

PURE BRED.

An Expression Without a Very Exact Definition.

The correct definition of the expression "pure bred" is at present agitating the minds of the breeders of some varieties of live stock, says the London Live Stock Journal. But apparently a solution of the difficulty is not so easy to discover as may at first sight appear to be the case. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that the expression "mongrel" is easily defined, though unfortunately it is by no means so simple a task as breeders might wish it to be to apply it to the animal world without giving great offense. The fact that the first definition of the word is "the progeny resulting from a cross between two breeds, as of domestic animals," does not seem to place any limit or restriction upon the extent of the application of the term, and as the vast majority of the modern varieties of animals are the result of crossing two or more breeds the difficulty of drawing the line is at once apparent. For instance, one breed is said to have been improved by the introduction of Flemish blood, and another was probably a half bred Arab and old English mare. Yet none of these breeds can be legitimately stigmatized as mongrel, though, according to the rendering of the immortal Webster, they can scarcely claim to be pure bred. The very thoroughbred of which all Englishmen are so justly proud is admittedly the result of a comparatively recent cross, and even many varieties of ponies which for centuries have roamed their native hills and moors are known to have been "improved" by the infusion of extraneous blood. The question of defining the term "pure bred" must therefore depend very greatly upon the personal ideas of those who use it. But perhaps a general point of agreement might be accepted upon something of such a basis—that a pure breed is one that has been uncrossed for a stated number of generations and is capable of reproducing its type with certainty. It is to be feared, however, that the inevitable throw backs which occasionally appear might raise difficulties over the acceptance of this definition of a very difficult expression.

The Biggest Hog.

The largest hog ever raised was recently slaughtered in New York. The animal was a Jersey red boar 2½ years old, weighing alive 1,600 pounds, and dressing 1,336 pounds. The National Provisioner has the following to say of the prodigy: "This huge swine measured over 9 feet from tip of its nose to end of its tail. It measures 2½ feet across the loin, 2½ feet across the hams and 6 feet in girth. This makes the hog 3 feet through. It is split at the shoulder, and to look into the great carcass is like looking into the crevice of a cavern. The carcass spreads across the perspective of the store like a Titanic statue of pork personified. It also looks like the body of the great hog god embalmed and reposing in its gigantic majesty. From hip bone to toe it measures 3½ feet and about the same from the crest of the shoulder blade to the bottom of the foot. The great fat jowls extend nearly 2 feet across. From between the ears to the tail is over 7 feet. The tail itself is the smallest thing in the big proportions. It is a mere point in the air. The face of the hog is also small for the size of the animal. It is only 16 inches long. The hams are monsters in size, and the vast stretch of pork in the long waist is borne just above the ground by four comparatively small feet. The usual porker is a mere pygmy by its side. The biggest hog heretofore grown weighed 1,250 pounds dead weight."

Sheep Culture.

We are only beginning the business of sheep culture on this side of the Atlantic. It will not do for us to adopt without due consideration the fashions in breeding which are existing in other countries. Every distinct people and nation has different needs, habits and thoughts. Hence while we may adopt some foreign customs for a beginning these soon change as they are found to be deficient in some respects. The foreign habit of mutton eating, for instance, and our American tastes in this respect differ and always will from those of other countries, and we shall always have a distinct American mutton sheep evolved out of our popular tastes in this respect. Consequently we must inevitably soon find out that as a people we have distinct tastes in this respect, and those who cater to the markets must study the demands of them and meet them, and not be guided unwisely by foreign habits.—American Sheep Breeder.

Shelter For Sheep.

Sheep suffer if kept in close, underground, unventilated stables, which are pretty sure to be also damp and have foul air. Even in warm weather sheep will prefer to sleep on knolls not merely to be able to watch against danger, but also to secure free circulation of pure air. So long as the roof keeps out the rain the open texture of the wool on the sheep's backs will keep cold out, however severe, provided it is not accompanied by wet. The sheep need this shelter from rain, even when the weather is not so very cold, though the oil which nature provides protects the skin from being wet, unless the storm is so long continued that the sheep are chilled through.—Boston Cultivator.

CHEVIOT SHEEP.

Their Adaptability to Varied Sections of the United States.

Professor C. S. Plumb, director of the experiment station of Purdue university, is perhaps the best authority on the Cheviot sheep in the United States, and writes about the breed as follows.

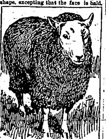
The Cheviot breed of sheep has been bred for over a century or so in the mountains lying between England and Scotland. This with the Black Faced highland breed comprises the two most important mountain breeds of sheep known. The Black Face breed is a long wool type of sheep, living on the more elevated mountain regions, while the Cheviots are found on the lower elevations. The Cheviot, however, has also been extensively and successfully introduced all over northern Scotland.

The introduction of the Cheviot to the United States dates from about 1838, when it was taken to New York state and where it has since been grown with considerable success in the region of Otsego county. During recent years, however, the breed has been securing a foothold in the west, so that today a number of large and fine flocks are found in Indiana. In fact, the two principal breeding grounds for Cheviots now are in the states indicated.

There are several things to commend the Cheviot to the sheep breeders of this country. It is a sheep that produces both a fleece and mutton of superior quality. Cheviot mutton has for over a century been regarded as one of the very best in both Scotland and England. In 1897, in a trip through those countries, I asked numerous breeders of other breeds how they valued Cheviot mutton, and in every instance and without hesitation they commended it as very superior. One of the best known Shropshire breeders of England gave high testimonial to Cheviot mutton.

The fleece is of the middle class and shears about eight or nine pounds on an average. The ram, however, will grow a fleece of 12 to 15 pounds weight.

The fleece covers the body in good shape, excepting that the face is bald, the wool meeting the hair at the ears and cheeks in a decided ruffle, while the legs are bare below the knees and hocks. Some of the handsomest middle wools I have seen came from an Indiana Cheviot flock, and this topped the market that year for middle wool in the region where grown.



AMERICAN CHEVIOT.

The Cheviot is a pure white breed, excepting for nose and nostrils, which must be black.

In early times the Cheviot had a lightness of shoulder, but that is no longer the case, and they are comparable in this respect with the other standard mutton breeds. This breed will present a strong loin and back, good full hams and a bone of superior quality. The ewes are strong milkers and are more prolific than the average.

The rams should weigh in good flesh about 200 or more pounds and the ewes 150.

The Cheviot is one of the most stylish breeds of sheep in the world, having a carriage of great attractiveness. The head is kept very erect, the ears are usually quite animated, the eyes are rather prominent and bright and life and activity are striking features. The males in particular are also characterized by a Roman nose, which gives an uncommon appearance to a bunch of Cheviots that is not without its effect.

For a mountain breed the Cheviot will commend itself as a candidate of the highest class. Its ancestry runs back to the mountain for its original home, and there it thrives today as it has for a century. And so for the man possessing a hilly or mountainous farm the Cheviot is worthy special consideration. The breed is hardy and of strong constitution, otherwise it would have long ago fallen by the wayside. This sheep is a good forager and will secure his living where others might fail. And so these qualities make him worthy of recommendation to the farmers of the eastern mountain region of the country, where in too many cases the Merino or its crosses are now being kept. The Cheviot is being successfully bred in the mountains of New England, and something of an acquaintance with the lower Alleghanies convinces me that this breed would do well on the upper ranges of these. On the "balds" of the mountains of western North Carolina and eastern Tennessee, it seems to me, is a good field for raising Cheviots. While some other breeds have thriven under quite a range of conditions the Cheviot has shown an unusual adaptability to a variation, for not only has he been shown to be a most superior mountain breed, but he also is very successfully grown on the lower lands of the west. I know of flocks in Indiana that have been kept with the greatest success for years, and more beautiful flocks I have never seen.

More Mutton.

The increasing demand for mutton is far in excess of the increase of population, and shows plainly that it now pays to raise sheep for food.

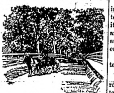
MINNESOTA IN LINE.

The State Will Aid In the Construction of Highways.

Complete returns of the Minnesota state election show that the state aid amendment to the constitution has been passed by the people by a vote of 70,043 to 38,017. The returns have only recently been completed owing to the unsettled condition of the northern and eastern portions of the state. This is the first time that a popular vote has ever been taken in any state upon the good roads question, and the result is a most emphatic indorsement of state aid as a solution, says L. A. W. Bulletin.

The constitutional amendment was introduced at the 1897 session of the Minnesota legislature by Mr. A. B. Choate of Minneapolis as the representative of the League of American Wheelmen, and its passage by that body was the result of his persistent and diplomatic work in behalf of the measure. This left it to be submitted to popular vote for its final passage. A strong educational campaign for good roads was carried on by the League of American Wheelmen throughout Minnesota during last summer and fall with the active assistance of the bureau of road inquiry at Washington and the press of Minnesota. A large edition of pamphlets, explaining the state aid system of road building and its advantages to farmers, was distributed, and numerous articles and editorials upon the subject appeared in the papers in various parts of the state. The resulting vote for the amendment is almost two to one in its favor.

The Minnesota legislature will now take the necessary steps to put a system of state aid into operation such as is now in force in New Jersey and in New York. Farmers especially will appreciate this, as it will enable them to obtain durable highways without being obliged to bear the entire expense, as they do at present. In New Jersey and New York the cost of roads built by state aid is divided between the state, the counties and the local taxpayers in the towns. Many towns availing themselves of the New York law are securing funds for road building purposes from outside sources equal to four or five times that which they raise themselves. Country taxpayers have learned that state aid to roads provides a means by which the large city taxpayers and corporations owning valuable franchises from the state are made to share in the expense, and that it remains optional with the farming districts to avail themselves of this assistance or not, as they may choose. This explains the popularity of state aid in Minnesota and the large vote in its favor.



WE WANT THIS KIND.

Sentiment For Good Roads.

Road building by county jail inmates is to be undertaken in Oneida county, N. Y., on recommendation of a committee appointed by the supervisors to consider how best to comply with the requirements of the law regarding the labor of prisoners. This disposition of the matter is following the example in Warren and St. Lawrence counties, where the plan is in successful operation, even at a distance of six or eight miles from the jail. The Oneida county committee note in their report that the sentiment in favor of good roads is almost universal, and that only the expense stands in the way of gratifying this sentiment. When this expense can be reduced to the minimum by the employment of convicts it is believed that the farmers will heartily co-operate in the good roads movement.

An Expensive Mudhole.

The mayor and city council of Cumberland, Md., were recently the defendants in a damage suit brought by Charles J. Jordon. The jury brought in the verdict of $1,400 for the plaintiff. This damage suit was brought by Jordon against the city for injuries sustained by reason of his falling out of his wagon on account of a mudhole in the street. His arm was broken and will be permanently affected to a certain extent. He sustained other injuries, for all of which he receives $1,400, just on account of a mud puddle on a back street near the city limits. The case was a hotly contested one and will likely go to the court of appeals.

Brick Roads Popular.

The building of brick paved country roads appears to be growing in public favor. In Cuyahoga county, O., the commissioners are building 16 foot brick pavements in the country in all directions from Cleveland. The new roads are said to be very popular. The commissioners announce that they intend to pave in the same manner all the principal roads in the county.

The Higbie Road Law.

Under the Higbie good roads law of New York eight miles of stone road can now be built at a cost of only $1,800 to the property owners. The whole cost is $12,000, of which the county has to pay $4,200, the state $6,000 and the property owners the balance.

Will Lessen Crime.

An argument offered for the employment of prisoners in building roads is that the fear of such public degradation will deter from the commission of petty crimes and will lessen the incursion of tramps into a community.

ITS GENEROUS

An Offer Which John Durnin Makes to Hibner.

F. Hibner used up considerable space in the Press last week to deny the article published in the NEWS regarding his being discharged as city attorney. Whether or not he has been discharged, is a very unimportant question when it is taken into consideration that he will not receive any more pay. Mayor Dobner emphatically states that he will not sign another warrant for Hibner's salary, except it be reduced to $1 per month. The fact that the council did not discharge Hibner only shows bad faith upon the part of that body. Mr. Dobner was assured by the councilmen that on condition he signed the warrant for $35, Hibner would be discharged.

A large majority of the citizens and taxpayers are in favor of seeing the office of city attorney left vacant.

In this connection we will state that although one P. O. Bergh is desirous of parading before the public and making an ass of himself, we will refuse to assist him. There was a time when we offered to show that worthy he was not only a liar but guilty of committing a criminal offense.

John Durnin, the livery man, is a philantrophist. He offers to donate to F. Hibner a bill which he holds against him of over $40, provided he leaves the city. Ten dollars of the amount, Mr. Durnin states, was borrowed money which he let Hibner have to get married on.

Just why it is that so many scury knaves are allowed to hang on the outskirts of so honorable a profession as law is hard to understand. Living by petty wits—utterly ignorant of the law—with no skill to conduct a case in court, and with neither the ability or honesty to advise a client upon a given state of facts, fleecing both the objects of attacks and clients. Any community is better off without them.

A Summer School for Teachers.

Crookston will have a summer training school for teachers, whether or not the state makes an appropriation for that purpose. Messrs. Malm & Sathre, of the Crookston College have decided to conduct a summer term of that institution with the idea of furnishing teachers as well as others with the opportunity for improvement in certain branches that are usually taught in these institutions.

The services of Prof. Thos. Casey, of Fisher, who during the past four years has had charge of the common English branches in the state training schools, have been secured. Mr. Casey's ability in this direction is well known, and the added opportunities offered teachers by the regular faculty of the institution will render it possible for the teachers to secure all they will lose by the failure of the legislature to provide a summer school.

Sam Cheely does all kinds of shoe repairing promptly and neatly.

FIRST ROUND

Red Lake County Is Victorious.

Red Lake county people engaged those of Polk county in battle before the senate committee on towns and counties today, and Red Lake county came off victorious.

The contest was over the Myran bill providing for a division of the assets between Polk and Red Lake counties. Under the bill authorizing the division of Polk county, no provision was made for the division of the assets, except such as might be reached by agreement between the parties. No agreement was reached by them, and the Red Lake people convinced the committee that they were getting the worst of the deal. Polk county held $36,000 in cash, $60,000 in delinquent taxes and a court house in which Red Lake county claims an interest. Then there are $15,000 in drainage bonds outstanding, for which Red Lake county has no use and doesn't want to assist in paying.

Red Lake people wanted their share of the assets, and they wanted the delinquent taxes collected in their territory used in offsetting their portion of the indebtedness.

The Polk county people stood upon the bill of 1893. They admitted that it was favorable to them, but said that the Red Lake people, having made the agreement and derived the benefit, should not now be allowed to repudiate it.

Attorney C. A. Boughton, of Red Lake county, argued in favor of the Myran bill, and A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, opposed it.

The bill was recommended to pass, with an amendment providing that the value of the court house should be placed at its value at the time of construction and not at its present valuation. A second amendment provides that the collections of delinquent taxes and the losses on those not collectable shall be divided proportionally between the two counties, instead of leaving them all to Polk county.—St. Paul Dispatch.

ALL SOLD

The Entire Product of the State Prison Twine Plant.

The farmers who have delayed sending in their orders for the state prison twine will likely have to purchase elsewhere this year. A statement given out by Warden Wolfer under date of April 6th is as follows:

"The entire output of the prison binder twine factory, embracing all the twine manufactured to date, together with all that can be manufactured up to Aug. 1st, has been sold, and not a pound is remaining for farmers who have not booked their orders. The total output will be over 5,000,000 pounds, of which amount 1,400,000 pounds were sold in small cash lots, and the remainder taken in club orders direct from farmers.

"The demand for twine this spring has been unprecedented. Orders to the number of several hundred are received at the factory daily. Since yesterday afternoon it is estimated that drafts, checks and cash to the amount of $15,000 forwarded for twine, have been returned. The law provides that after May 1st, the dealers may be supplied with twine. There will, however, be no twine for dealers this year."

Here's a Liable.

No matter if the train is two hours late leaving Thief River Falls some one comes a-running to catch it after it starts. Yesterday one such showed up, and the agent expressed it as his opinion that on judgment day when Gabriel blows his horn and the procession has started, some Thief Riverite will show up and want to delay the heaven-bound crowd until he gets his baggage checked.—Crookston Times.

Farmers Please Take Notice.

The State Treasurer having apportioned fifty pounds of beet sugar seed for free distribution in Red Lake county; you are hereby notified that the County Auditor will receive applications for said seed until the 20th day of April, 1899. Said applications will be filed and seed distributed as equally as possible.

Dated at Red Lake Falls this 5th day of April, 1899.

Effects Country Merchants.

The commissioner of internal revenue has recently rendered a decision that according to Deputy Collector Vars, is a very important one for Minnesota. In effect it means that all of the country merchants, and there are scores of them, in towns where there are no banking facilities who negotiate exchange are liable to a tax $50. And it makes no difference to the government how much business is done the law calls any one who is popularly known to be engaged in a business of the kind, a "broker," and it is enough to render him liable if he even "holds himself in readiness" to negotiate exchange.

CROSS SEEDING

It Will Give Five More Bushels to the Acre.

Farmers, make a note of this. Have you ever tried seeding your grain both ways of the field. It will not only increase the yield, but will help to protect the crop from hot winds. Drill in one half bushel of wheat per acre in the ordinary way, then drill in one half bushel per acre at right angles to the first seeding. If good seed is used, one bushel per acre is enough. By this method you cover the ground better, get a finer and firmer seed bed, and a better stand of wheat, and a better yield. The rows of grain running both ways of the field will prevent the dry winds from blowing through and evaporating the moisture from the soil. Reports received from eleven farmers along the "Soo" Line, of North Dakota, who tried this method in 1898, show an average increase of over five bushels to the acre. One Richland county farmer who made a careful test in two large fields adjoining, reports an increase of seven bushels of wheat per acre from the field that was drilled both ways. Cross seeding requires a little more work but it pays big returns. Give it a trial this year. If you are going to buy a new drill, buy a press drill that will put the seed in the ground right, and press the soil down firmly over it.

Death of Col. Stranahan.

Last Wednesday, March 29th, 1899, at 5:30 p. m. Mr. P. S. Stranahan peacefully passed away at the age of 59 years. Death came very suddenly, being taken down with pneumonia just a week before which resulted in jaundice. The whole family were at his bedside when he peacefully passed away with the exception of Mrs. Kellogg and his son, William, who arrived the day after his death. He was born at Saginaw, Mich., May 11, 1839 and married to Miss Jennie Buse, July 4th, 1865. The earlier years of his life were devoted to milling and carpenter work, the latter trade which he followed up to the time of his death. The funeral was held at the Methodist church Friday afternoon and was conducted by Rev. H. Logan. Kind friends furnished beautiful floral offerings and the singing by the choir was very appropriate. The church was crowded with citizens of St. Hilaire, Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls who came to pay their last respect to their departed friend. The body was laid to rest in the Lutheran cemetery east of town. The pall bearers were M. McAndress, O. W. Brink, A. H. Weagant, C. G. Rapp, P. Patterson and W. A. Sorsoleil.

He leaves a wife and three daughters, Mildred and Mrs. Carrie Dainard, of this village, and Mrs. Elizabeth Kellogg, of Walhalla, N. Dak., four sons, Clarence, of St. Hilaire; Levi, of Thief River Falls; William C., of Crookston and Elmer H., of Fargo, N. Dak. The Spectator joins in extending sympathy to the bereaved family and their sad affliction.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Gov. Lind has vetoed the Anoka-Hastings asylum bill.

The bill to increase the term of county auditor from two to four years will probably become a law.

The Daily East Grand Forks Courier is only two years old, but it is one of the best papers published in the Northwest.

The best thing the citizens of any town can do is to give a hearty support to the enterprises already located there.

Admiral Dewey, being interviewed regarding the suggestion that he be made a candidate for the president of the United States next year, says:

"I am a sailor. A sailor has no politics. The administration is his party, and, Republican or Democratic, it makes no difference."

POPULATION OF THE U. S.

Some of our thoughtful statisticians are predicting that there will be great disappointment when the population of the United States is announced at the close of the next census. It will be remembered that there was great surprise when the returns of the census of 1890 came in and gave us only 62,000,000 instead of the 70,000,000 we had claimed. No good reason exists for believing that the growth during the last ten years has been more rapid than from 1880 to 1890. In fact, there has been a considerable falling off in immigration. The total number of immigrants during the ten years from 1880 to 1890, inclusive, was 5,248,568, and the total number arriving from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, was 3,539,435. Estimating the arrivals during the present year to equal those of the two last and adding 230,000 to the above total, the population has been increased 3,769,435 from abroad during the last decade.

Public speakers are in the habit of proclaiming our population to be about 75,000,000. The treasury department in making its percentages of commerce, circulation, etc., etc., bases its circulations upon an estimated population of 75,465,000 on the first of January, 1899. Last year an almanacmaker in New York obtained estimates from the governors of all the states, which aggregated 77,803,231. The almanacs and statisticians vary all the way from 70,000,000 to 85,000,000 population.

The increase from 1870 to 1880 was about 12,000,000; the increase from 1880 to 1890 was about 12,000,000, and, adding 12,000,000 to the total returned by the last census, we have 74,622,250.—Chicago Record.

Exchange Sayings.

Over at Rat Portage a brewer lables his brands "Sultana lager," "Mikado pale ale" and "Regina porter" after the three gold mines on the Lake of the Woods. To be filled with this article of booze is calculated to make the boozer feel as rich as the mine owners.—Roseau Times.

Grafton Record: A New Hampshire man while crossing a railroad track was struck by a fast mail and carried twenty miles before he was discovered on the pilot and the train stopped. The conductor was mad about the delay, and collected fare of the man, who had to walk back in the rain.

There have been a constant clamor from Gov. Lind's new appointees for an increase in appropriations for their respective departments. Mr. Pope, the public examiner, says he cannot get along with the funds at his disposal and wants more money than the law allows. Mr. Bowler, the dairy and food commissioner, wanted the appropriation for his department raised to $25,000 but the legislature turned down his request because it was unnecessary. The state departments have been doing good work under Republican administration on an economical basis and there seems to be little reason why the appropriations should now be materially increased.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Devils Lake Inter-Ocean: It may not be generally known here, but it is being advertised throughout the East that at Medora, N. D., there is in successful operation a factory engaged in canning horseflesh for human food. This flourishing industry suggests others no less revolting. For instance, capital might find profitable investment in canning prairie wolves and dog meat as delicacies for our noble red men. Or, to reach out to the Orient, a big trade might be worked up in China for a superior article of canned gophers, another product of our prairies. Poor North Dakota! She had the divorce law. That blot was no sooner erased from her escutcheon, than along comes the horse meat stain to mar the beauty of her emblem.

A Surprise Party.

Last Friday afternoon was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. L. E. Maxwell and Mrs. Chris Paulson and the latter opened her house to a few friends in honor of the occasion. In the evening a goodly number walked into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and informed the lady that they had heard it was her birthday and that they had invited themselves there to spend the evening and for her to sit still and let them run things, which they did to the satisfaction of all. An elegant lunch was served and a number of valuable presents were given. They departed at a late hour. All joined in the remark that it was the pleasantest evening ever spent at a surprise party.

Died.

Last Thursday, April 6, at 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. D. Brown died. The deceased had been sick for some time of consumption and death was not unexpected. She had been a resident of this city for a number of years, her maiden name being Clara Lilleman. The funeral services were held Saturday and were very largely attended.

WORK BEGUN

The New Saw Mill Now Being Built.

Chas. J. Winton, L. N. Anson, John O'Day and John, Landers, four of the gentlemen interested in the saw mill at this place, arrived in the city last Saturday from Wisconsin. The two first named gentlemen went back Monday.

They have caused work to be commenced in the erection of the new mill which they propose to build. It will have a capacity of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 feet and will contain one band saw, a re-saw and a circular saw. It is expected to have it completed sometime during the latter part of May, and will be run day and night for the remaining part of the season, giving employment to over 300 men.

The new firm has as members some of the most wealthy lumbermen of Wisconsin, and they propose to do business and a lots of it. They will log winter and summer, thus keeping a large number of men at work up at the lake while the mill is running here. The lumber yards in this city will be enlarged and fenced in. A new plaining mill will be built in the fall which will probably be located upon the east side of the river. A bridge will be built across the river at Kretzschmar's dam in order to run cars across the river.

How to Avoid Colds.

Colds can be avoided by proper attention to bodily conditions. The lungs are highly susceptible to all variations of the atmosphere, and hence we breathe the germs of disease unconsciously. Air should be inhaled through the nose instead of the mouth. In walking we should breathe slowly, allowing the oxygen of the air as much time to escape as to enter the system. Then we should do everything possible to strengthen the lungs. Calisthenics is an important aid in this direction. We should practice from a half to three-quarters of an hour daily. Always be careful not to exercise too violently. The grip is nothing more than a cold in an advanced stage.

How to Bake Cauliflower.

Boil tender, but not until it breaks. Split down the middle with a sharp knife. Lay the cut sides downward in a baking dish. Pour over and about it a large cupful of drawn butter, sift fine crumbs on top and set in the oven until it begins to brown. Serve in a baking dish. Pass vinegar or cut lemon with it.

How to Make English Stew.

This is an excellent preparation of cold meat, which is first cut in slices and then sprinkled with pepper, salt and flour. Lay them in a dish and on them place a few pickles of any kind or a small quantity of pickled cabbage. Take a teacup half full of water. Add to it a small quantity of the pickle vinegar or a small quantity of catchup and any gravy that may be set by for use. Stir all together and pour it over the meat and set it in the oven for about half an hour and serve hot.

How to Preserve the Teeth.

Take one pound of stale bread, parch until black and ready to crumble, then place into a mortar or wooden bowl and pound to a powder. When thoroughly pulverized it is ready for use. Keep in a dry box and apply to the teeth with a wet brush. This prevents decay and leaves the teeth pearly and white.

How to Broil Halibut.

Slices of halibut, salt, pepper, butter. Cut the slices of fish about an inch thick, season with pepper and salt and lay them in melted butter one-half hour, allowing three tablespoonfuls of butter to a pound of fish; then roll them in flour and boil about 20 minutes. Serve very hot.

How to Remove Freckles.

Five cents' worth red precipitate, 10 cents' worth Venice turpentine, one pound lard. Mix well together and apply at night after washing face and hands in warm water. In a short time all the freckles will disappear, leaving the face smooth and lovely.

Irate Business Man (white with anger at being disturbed)—You book agents make me so angry with your confounded nerve and impudence that I cannot find words to express my indignation.

Book Agent (jumping with enthusiasm)—Then, sir, you are in luck. I have here the very thing you need—a dictionary of the English language, containing all the words and slang phrases known, and only 5 shillings. Take it, and you will never be at a loss to express yourself again.—London Tit-Bits.

Proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners.

OFFICIAL.

Red Lake Falls, Minn., March 27th, 1899, 2 o'clock, p. m.

Pursuant to call dated Feby. 28th, 1899, board of county commissioners met in extra session this day.

Meeting called to order by the chairman.

All members present.

Petition of Joseph Prudhomme asking to be set off from school district No. 216 to district No. 45 was presented.

Motion made by Hansen seconded by Johnson that the same be laid on the table until next meeting.

Motion carried unanimously.

Hearing was then had on petition of Pierre Emard asking to be set off from School district No. 49 to district No. 112.

Motion made by Hebert seconded by Hansen and carried unanimously the same was granted and the following order was made:

Order Setting off Legal Voter from one School District to another.

Whereas, The petition of Pierre Emard, a legal voter, freeholder and resident of School district No. 49 in this county, with the approval of the County Superintendent endorsed thereon, representing that he is the owner of the lands hereinafter described, which are situate in said school district, and adjoin School district No. 112 and asking that he with his said lands may be set off from said school district No. 49 to said adjoining school district No. 112 for the following reasons:

The school house in district No. 112 is one mile nearer to my residence than the school house in district No. 49, there is a good road to the school house in Dist. No. 112 while there is no road to the school in District No. 49 and the Clearwater river runs between the school house in No. 49 and my farm, making it impossible for children to attend school there.

Was presented to the Board of county commissioners of this county, at a session of said board held on the 30th day of January, A. D. 1899, for the action of said board thereon; and

Whereas, it was thereupon ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition at a session of said board, commencing on the 27th day of March, A. D. 1899, at the county auditor's office in Red Lake Falls in said county; and

Irving Didn't Read.

Sir Henry Irving appeared at the Theater Royal, Edinburgh, in 1857, and two years later he went to Linlithgow to give a reading there. He was delighted to see his name in big letters on the posters on arriving in the town. He went to the hall, but there was no crowd there—in fact, the caretaker had not arrived, having forgotten all about the reading. Irving went in search of him, and things were got ready; 8:30 o'clock arrived, but no one came to the hall—not even a small boy. In recalling the incident Sir Henry was wont to say, "I never slept better than I did that night."

Its Natural Effect.

"How many of these sheep got out of here?" asked the angry farmer.

"I don't know," replied the new hired man, rubbing his eyes. "After I'd watched five or six of 'em jump over the fence I seemed to lose the count. That always puts me to sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Of No Avail.

"Prisoner," said the court, "have you anything to say for yourself?"

"What's the use?" replied the culprit; "you guys wouldn't believe me."—Philadelphia North American.

In 1666 the great fire in London burned over 436 acres, destroying at least $35,000,000 worth of property. In 1872 the Boston fire burned over 60 acres, at a loss of $1,000,000 an acre. If the same fire occurred today, it would cost, at the very lowest estimate, $100,000,000. In 1893 the loss on the 2½ acres burned over was over $350,000,000.

POPULAR PROVERBS

SOME THAT ARE FAIRLY BRIMFUL OF ABSURDITY.

Maxims Often Quoted and at Times Advanced as Argument Which Have Neither Wit Nor Wisdom to Commend Them—Contradictory Sayings.

There is a mistaken notion abroad, says a writer in London Tit-Bits, that proverbs are epitomes of wisdom, the concentrated experience of generations, and that to quote one of them in a discussion is to advance an unanswerable argument. And yet what is there to recommend many of them beyond their jingle? Take our familiar friend:

Early to Bed and Early to Rise, Makes a Man Healthy, Wealthy and Wise.—Obviously, the main idea was to find a word to rhyme with "rise," and "wise" was the unfortunate word chosen. And now, trustful little boys are persuaded to go to bed at unreasonably early hours in the hope of becoming a sort of Sandow-Rothschild-Solomon, though we all know milkmen and market gardeners who get up at 5 a. m. and are neither rich nor clever, and members of parliament who go to bed late and are, if not clever, at least not poor and infirm. Since the invention of gas and electric light this ridiculous old proverb has outlived its original modicum of truth, and proves we must not venerate proverbs on account of their hoary antiquity.

The Early Bird Catches the Worm.—The mistake made here is that it assumes we are all birds. But some of us are worms. If we were not, what would become of the birds? And, therefore, while the birds do well to be early, let the worms be late—the later the better.

The Pitcher That Goes Oft to the Well Is Broken at Last.—Note, it does not say "is broken first," but "is broken at last." Of course, every pitcher, whether it goes to the well or stays on the shelf, is broken at last, and the only result of this absurd proverb is to encourage lazy folk to do as little work as possible and unnecessarily keep out of harm's way.

If You Want a Thing Well Done, Do It Yourself.—There's shocking bad advice with which to start a youth on life's journey. If he wants a button well sewed on, he's to do it himself; if he wants his hair well cut, he's to cut it himself. He must mend his own chairs, shoe his own nag, darn his own socks. In short, from buying a horse to blacking his boots, he must do it himself. Poor fellow!

A Contented Mind Is a Continual Feast.—Can any one say what that means? Does it mean that the owner continually feasts on his contented mind or that the contented mind is continually feasting? Probably the latter, as we sometimes hear that "a hungry man's an angry man," and we all know that a satisfied appetite is the source of contentment. Hence it is not the contented mind which makes the feast, as the silly proverb implies, but the continual feast which produces the contented mind.

There's No Rule Without an Exception.—This is not only a proverb; it is also a rule. But obviously there is no exception to this rule, because if there were a rule with an exception this proberb would be untrue. But the proverb is a rule which has no exception, which, as Mr. Euclid would say, is absurd. Which was to be shown.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss, 'Tis Folly to Be Wise.—For oracular stupidity this proverb may be classed with the one about the pitcher. Granting it true, the difficulty is to know where ignorance is bliss and of course the proverb gives no assistance where it is most needed. Most people quote it as "ignorance is bliss," in their blissful ignorance, but if a proverb gives rise to error it is not only absurd; it is also dangerous. When people say—

A Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing—They make that a reason not for learning more, but for learning less.

Love Me, Love My Dog.—If I go a-courting, and my ladylove bids me love her scented, dyspeptic poodle, which is not necessary to her health and comfort, must I not much more love her glass eye and false teeth and hair, which are? Yet common sense revolts at the notion, and I therefore assume that a proverb which, logically treated, makes such unreasonable demands on my affections is wrong and absurd.

Seeing Is Believing.—How can any reflecting person repeat these words? For very often we believe we see what really we do not. If a conjurer were to take this proverb as his motto, every one would see its absurdity. A straight stick half submerged in water looks crooked. Fortunately, another proverb says, "Trust not to appearances." And this bring us to the exquisite absurdity of popular proverbs which run in contradictory pairs and support both sides of an argument. Thus one proverb says, "Look before you leap;" another, "Who hesitates is lost." Sometimes we hear that "Second thoughts are best;" at other times that "Delays are dangerous." The desperate man relies on "Nothing venture, nothing have;" the cautious man on "Never venture out of your depth till you can swim." The impatient matrimonial candidate believes that "Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing;" the tardy one that one may "Marry in haste and repent at leisure." And so on ad infinitum. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—"Out of sight, out of mind." "It's never too late to mend"—"A fool at 40 will never be wise." "Too many cooks spoil the broth"—"There's safety in numbers" and "Two heads are better than one."

Therefore, let us examine our proverbial coinage before we pass it into the moral currency.

What some people need more than anything else is change—they have dollars, and they need sense.—Jewish Comment.

PEOPLE WHO GAMBLE.

Chinese and Italians Especially Addicted to Games of Chance.

Of all the nations of the earth who gamble—and they all do it more or less—the Chinese come in an easy first. Superstition and the gambling mania go in double harness, and while the mandarins fly kites to decide what should be done about Wei-Hai-Wei and Talien-Wan the humbler Celestials gamble for dear life to pass the time away. "The Chinese play night and day," says a traveler, "till they have lost all they are worth, and then they usually go and hang themselves," from which it would appear that the yellow danger is not so formidable after all.

The Chinese laborers in the United States squander their earnings in a game called "white pigeon's ticket." White, by the way, is the unlucky color for the gamer and the lucky one for the keeper of the gaming house. These gentry keep orange peel in a box, believing that it will bring them luck.

The Italians are no less superstitious, and they gamble persistently, the poor people, especially, in the government lotteries. Everything has a number; a cat, a dog, a gondola, and the "Libro dei Sogno"—the lotto player's oracle—will tell you what the number is and the rules for interpreting the appearances in dreams. Visitors to Venice, which has always been a stronghold of gambling, may have seen the declaration of the winning figures from the Campanile of St. Mark's—the silent, eager crowd gathered in the square and the group of officials gathered round the boy with the bandaged eyes who draws the numbers from the cage.

There is a story told in Venice of a madman who hailed a gondolier from the window of the madhouse on the island to tell him the numbers he had dreamed. The man put his money on them and won, and from that day to this the gondoliers go near the window as they pass in the hope that the madman will call again. The story is true.—London Chronicle.

VORACIOUS LITTLE ROBINS.

Each Required Fourteen Yards of Angleworms Every Day.

A would be philanthropist relates his experiences trying to play mother to a nest of little robins, which had by some accident been deprived of their rightful mother's care. He diligently set to work digging angleworms, and supposed that he was fulfilling his whole duty, when one of the poor little songsters died. Upon examination of the body, which was reduced to skin and bone, the foster parent came to the conclusion that it must have died of starvation.

Deeply grieved at his shortcoming, he redoubled his efforts, determined to at least save the other two. It was not long, however, before a second one died, evidently of the same malady. The good man then resolved that, whatever the third one died of, it should not be starvation, and took off his coat and went to work in earnest. He kept on with the angleworm diet until he found that his one little bird was consuming from 14 to 18 yards of angleworms a day. This was too much for his patience, and he proceeded to substitute the more easily managed diet of bread and milk and other delicacies, which were, however, not nearly so much to Miss Robin's taste.

Wanting to discover whether he had been catering to a family of abnormal appetites, our friend took to watching the methods of a real mother bird and found that she fed her young every two minutes. He then consulted the learned books upon birds and discovered that 14 yards of worms a day, with meals every two minutes, is the average rate of feeding fledgelings. He has therefore decided that he does not care to take up raising birds by hand as a business.—Boston Transcript.

He Got the Ad.

"You're not on that horrid paper, are you," cried the girl who speaks her mind, "though I did once meet a reporter from it who was rather nice? He came to see about getting an advertisement— What! Not a reporter? Why, I thought he was. Well, anyway I had lost a dog, and he said he had heard of it and wanted to know if I didn't want to advertise in his paper for it. I told him I didn't believe I liked his old paper, and he said he didn't think much of it himself, but he thought it was pretty apt to reach the class of people who stole dogs. And so since he was so polite about it I thought I might as well advertise in it. But I didn't get the dog."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Show Your Best Qualities.

Honesty does not require us to hang our oil paintings faced to the wall in order that our friends may see that they are made on coarse canvas. It is right to appear always at our best. Give the world your brightest thoughts, your most courteous speech, the outcome of your kindest impulses and purest motives, no matter if you are conscious that these things are above your ordinary level. THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Gov. Lind has vetoed the Anoka-Hastings asylum bill.

The bill to increase the term of county auditor from two to four years will probably become a law.

The Daily East Grand Forks Courier is only two years old, but it is one of the best papers published in the Northwest.

The best thing the citizens of any town can do is to give a hearty support to the enterprises already located there.

Admiral Dewey, being interviewed regarding the suggestion that he be made a candidate for the president of the United States next year, says:

"I am a sailor. A sailor has no politics. The administration is his party, and, Republican or Democratic, it makes no difference."

POPULATION OF THE U. S.

Some of our thoughtful statisticians are predicting that there will be great disappointment when the population of the United States is announced at the close of the next census. It will be remembered that there was great surprise when the returns of the census of 1890 came in and gave us only 62,000,000 instead of the 70,000,000 we had claimed. No good reason exists for believing that the growth during the last ten years has been more rapid than from 1880 to 1890. In fact, there has been a considerable falling off in immigration. The total number of immigrants during the ten years from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, was 5,248,568, and the total number arriving from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, was 3,539,435. Estimating the arrivals during the present year to equal those of the two last and adding 230,000 to the above total, the population has been increased 3,769,435 from abroad during the last decade.

Public speakers are in the habit of proclaiming our population to be about 75,000,000. The treasury department in making its percentages of commerce, circulation, etc., etc., bases its circulations upon an estimated population of 75,465,000 on the first of January, 1899. Last year an almanacmaker in New York obtained estimates from the governors of all the states, which aggregated 77,803,231. The almanacs and statisticians vary all the way from 70,000,000 to 85,000,000 population.

The increase from 1870 to 1880 was about 12,000,000; the increase from 1880 to 1890 was about 12,000,000, and, adding 12,000,000 to the total returned by the last census, we have 74,622,250.—Chicago Record.

Exchange Sayings.

Over at Rat Portage a brewer lables his brands "Sultana lager," "Mikado pale ale" and "Regina porter" after the three gold mines on the Lake of the Woods. To be filled with this article of booze is calculated to make the boozer feel as rich as the mine owners.—Roseau Times.

Grafton Record: A New Hampshire man while crossing a railroad track was struck by a fast mail and carried twenty miles before he was discovered on the pilot and the train stopped. The conductor was mad about the delay, and collected fare of the man, who had to walk back in the rain.

There have been a constant clamor from Gov. Lind's new appointees for an increase in appropriations for their respective departments. Mr. Pope, the public examiner, says he cannot get along with the funds at his disposal and wants more money than the law allows. Mr. Bowler, the dairy and food commissioner, wanted the appropriation for his department raised to $25,000 but the legislature turned down his request because it was unnecessary. The state departments have been doing good work under Republican administration on an economical basis—and there seems to be little reason why the appropriations should now be materially increased.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Devils Lake Inter-Ocean: It may not be generally known here, but it is being advertised throughout the East that at Medora, N. D., there is in successful operation a factory engaged in canning horseflesh for human food. This flourishing industry suggests others no less revolting. For instance, capital might find profitable investment in canning prairie wolves and dog meat as delicacies for our noble red men. Or, to reach out to the Orient, a big trade might be worked up in China for a superior article of canned gophers, another product of our prairies. Poor North Dakota! She had the divorce law. That blot was no sooner erased from her escutcheon, than along comes the horse meat stain to mar the beauty of her emblem.

A Surprise Party.

Last Friday afternoon was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. L. E. Maxwell and Mrs. Chris Paulson and the latter opened her house to a few friends in honor of the occasion. In the evening a goodly number walked into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and informed the lady that they had heard it was her birthday and that they had invited themselves there to spend the evening and for her to sit still and let them run things, which they did to the satisfaction of all. An elegant lunch was served and a number of valuable presents were given. They departed at a late hour. All joined in the remark that it was the pleasantest evening ever spent at a surprise party.

Died.

Last Thursday, April 6, at 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. D. Brown died. The deceased had been sick for some time of consumption and death was not unexpected. She had been a resident of this city for a number of years, her maiden name being Clara Lilleman. The funeral services were held Saturday and were very largely attended.

WORK BEGUN

The New Saw Mill Now Being Built.

Chas. J. Winton, L. N. Anson, John O'Day and John Landers, four of the gentlemen interested in the saw mill at this place, arrived in the city last Saturday from Wisconsin. The two first named gentlemen went back Monday.

They have caused work to be commenced in the erection of the new mill which they propose to build. It will have a capacity of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 feet and will contain one band saw, a re-saw and a circular saw. It is expected to have it completed sometime during the latter part of May, and will be run day and night for the remaining part of the season, giving employment to over 300 men.

The new firm has as members some of the most wealthy lumbermen of Wisconsin, and they propose to do business and a lots of it. They will log winter and summer, thus keeping a large number of men at work up at the lake while the mill is running here. The lumber yards in this city will be enlarged and fenced in. A new plaining mill will be built in the fall which will probably be located upon the east side of the river. A bridge will be built across the river at Kretzschmar's dam in order to run cars across the river.

How to Avoid Colds.

Colds can be avoided by proper attention to bodily conditions. The lungs are highly susceptible to all variations of the atmosphere, and hence we breathe the germs of disease unconsciously. Air should be inhaled through the nose instead of the mouth. In walking we should breathe slowly, allowing the oxygen of the air as much time to escape as to enter the system. Then we should do everything possible to strengthen the lungs. Calisthenics is an important aid in this direction. We should practice from a half to three-quarters of an hour daily. Always be careful not to exercise too violently. The grip is nothing more than a cold in an advanced stage.

How to Bake Cauliflower.

Boil tender, but not until it breaks. Split down the middle with a sharp knife. Lay the cut sides downward in a baking dish. Pour over and about it a large cupful of drawn butter, sift fine crumbs on top and set in the oven until it begins to brown. Serve in a baking dish. Pass vinegar or cut lemon with it.

How to Make English Stew.

This is an excellent preparation of cold meat, which is first cut in slices and then sprinkled with pepper, salt and flour. Lay them in a dish and on them place a few pickles of any kind or a small quantity of pickled cabbage. Take a teacup half full of water. Add to it a small quantity of the pickle vinegar or a small quantity of catchup and any gravy that may be set by for use. Stir all together and pour it over the meat and set it in the oven for about half an hour and serve hot.

How to Preserve the Teeth.

Take one pound of stale bread, parch until black and ready to crumble, then place into a mortar or wooden bowl and pound to a powder. When thoroughly pulverized it is ready for use. Keep in a dry box and apply to the teeth with a wet brush. This prevents decay and leaves the teeth pearly and white.

How to Broil Halibut.

Slices of halibut, salt, pepper, butter. Cut the slices of fish about an inch thick, season with pepper and salt and lay them in melted butter one-half hour, allowing three tablespoonfuls of butter to a pound of fish; then roll them in flour and boil about 20 minutes. Serve very hot.

How to Remove Freckles.

Five cents' worth red precipitate, 10 cents' worth Venice turpentine, one pound lard. Mix well together and apply at night after washing face and hands in warm water. In a short time all the freckles will disappear, leaving the face smooth and lovely.

Irate Business Man (white with anger at being disturbed)—You book agents make me so angry with your confounded nerve and impudence that I cannot find words to express my indignation.

Book Agent (jumping with enthusiasm)—Then, sir, you are in luck. I have here the very thing you need—a dictionary of the English language, containing all the words and slang phrases known, and only 5 shillings. Take it, and you will never be at a loss to express yourself again.—London Tit-Bits.

Motion carried unanimously.

Hearing was then had on petition of Pierre Emard asking to be set off from School district No. 49 to district No. 112.

Motion made by Hebert seconded by Hansen and carried unanimously the same was granted and the following order was made:

Whereas, The petition of Pierre Emard, a legal voter, freeholder and resident of School district No. 49 in this county, with the approval of the County Superintendent endorsed thereon, representing that he is the owner of the lands hereinafter described, which are situate in said school district, and adjoin School district No. 112 and asking that he with his said lands may be set off from said school district No. 49 to said adjoining school district No. 112 for the following reasons:

The school house in district No. 112 is one mile nearer to my residence than the school house in district No. 49, there is a good road to the school house in Dist. No. 112 while there is no road to the school in District No. 49 and the Clearwater river runs between the school house in No. 49 and my farm, making it impossible for children to attend school there.

Was presented to the Board of county commissioners of this county, at a session of said board held on the 30th day of January, A. D. 1899, for the action of said board thereon; and

Whereas, it was thereupon ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition at a session of said board, commencing on the 27th day of March, A.D. 1899, at the county auditor's office in Red Lake Falls in said county; and

Whereas, it was further ordered in and by said order that notice of the time and place of such hearing be given by posting a copy of said order in one public place in each of the school districts to be affected by said petition, and by handing to and leaving with the clerk of each of said school districts, personally, a copy of said order, at least ten days before the time appointed for such hearing; and

Whereas, at the said session of the said board of county commissioners commencing on said 27th day of March, A. D. 1899, due proof of the posting and service of said order of hearing as therein directed and required, more than ten days prior to said last named date, having been made and filed, said petition was publicly read and considered by the board, with everything which was said by said interested parties for or against granting the prayer of petitioner and said board being of opinion that petition should be granted, it is hereby ordered and determined, that the said petition and the following described lands owned by him, to-wit:

Hearing was then had on petition of Pierre Emard Jr. asking to be set off from school district No. 49 to district No. 112.

On motion made by Hansen seconded by Sutor and carried unanimously the same was granted and the following order was made:

Order setting off Legal Voter from one school district to another.

Whereas, The petition of Pierre Emard Jr., a legal voter, freeholder and resident of School district No. 49 in this county, with the approval of the county superintendent endorsed thereon, representing that he is the owner of the lands hereinafter described, which are situate in said school district and adjoin school district No. 112 and asking that he with his lands may be set off from said district No. 49 to said adjoining school district No. 112 for the following reasons:

Irving Didn't Read.

Sir Henry Irving appeared at the Theater Royal, Edinburgh, in 1857, and two years later he went to Linlithgow to give a reading there. He was delighted to see his name in big letters on the posters on arriving in the town. He went to the hall, but there was no crowd there—in fact, the caretaker had not arrived, having forgotten all about the reading. Irving went in search of him, and things were got ready; 8:30 o'clock arrived, but no one came to the hall—not even a small boy. In recalling the incident Sir Henry was wont to say, "I never slept better than I did that night."

Its Natural Effect.

"How many of these sheep got out of here?" asked the angry farmer.

"I don't know," replied the new hired man, rubbing his eyes. "After I'd watched five or six of 'em jump over the fence I seemed to lose the count. That always puts me to sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Of No Avail.

"Prisoner," said the court, "have you anything to say for yourself?"

"What's the use?" replied the culprit: "you guys wouldn't believe me."—Philadelphia North American.

In 1666 the great fire in London burned over 436 acres, destroying at least $35,000,000 worth of property. In 1872 the Boston fire burned over 60 acres, at a loss of $1,000,000 an acre. If the same fire occurred today, it would cost, at the very lowest estimate, $100,000,000. In 1898 the loss on the 3¼ acres burned over was over $350,000,000.

POPULAR PROVERBS

SOME THAT ARE FAIRLY BRIMFUL OF ABSURDITY.

Maxims Often Quoted and at Times Advanced as Argument Which Have Neither Wit Nor Wisdom to Commend Them—Contradictory Sayings.

There is a mistaken notion abroad, says a writer in London Tit-Bits, that proverbs are epitomes of wisdom, the concentrated experience of generations, and that to quote one of them in a discussion is to advance an unanswerable argument. And yet what is there to recommend many of them beyond their jingle? Take our familiar friend:

Early to Bed and Early to Rise, Makes a Man Healthy, Wealthy and Wise.—Obviously, the main idea was to find a word to rhyme with "rise," and "wise" was the unfortunate word chosen. And now, trustful little boys are persuaded to go to bed at unreasonably early hours in the hope of becoming a sort of Sandow-Rothschild-Solomon, though we all know milkmen and market gardeners who get up at 5 a. m. and are neither rich nor clever, and, members of parliament who go to bed late and are, if not clever, at least not poor and infirm. Since the invention of gas and electric light this ridiculous old proverb has outlived its original modicum of truth, and proves we must not venerate proverbs on account of their hoary antiquity.

The Early Bird Catches the Worm.—The mistake made here is that it assumes we are all birds. But some of us are worms. If we were not, what would become of the birds? And, therefore, while the birds do well to be early, let the worms be late—the later the better.

The Pitcher That Goes Oft to the Well Is Broken at Last.—Note, it does not say "is broken first," but "is broken at last." Of course, every pitcher, whether it goes to the well or stays on the shelf, is broken at last, and the only result of this absurd proverb is to encourage lazy folk to do as little work as possible, and, unnecessarily keep out of harm's way.

If You Want a Thing Well Done, Do It Yourself.—There's shocking bad advice with which to start a youth on life's journey. If he wants a button well sewed on, he's to do it himself; if he wants his hair well cut, he's to cut it himself. He must mend his own chairs, shoe his own nag, darn his own socks. In short, from buying a horse to blacking his boots, he must do it himself. Poor fellow!

A Contented Mind Is a Continual Feast.—Can any one say what that means? Does it mean that the owner continually feasts on his contented mind or that the contented mind is continually feasting? Probably the latter, as we sometimes hear that "a hungry man's an angry man," and we all know that a satisfied appetite is the source of contentment. Hence, it is not the contented mind which makes the feast, as the silly proverb implies, but the continual feast which produces the contented mind.

There's No Rule Without an Exception.—This is not only a proverb; it is also a rule. But obviously there is no exception to this rule, because if there were a rule with an exception this proverb would be untrue. But the proverb is a rule which has no exception, which, as Mr. Euclid would say, is absurd. Which was to be shown.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss, 'Tis Folly to Be Wise.—For oracular stupidity this proverb may be classed with the one about the pitcher. Granting it true, the difficulty is to know where ignorance is bliss and of course the proverb gives no assistance where it is most needed. Most people quote it as "ignorance is bliss," in their blissful ignorance, but if a proverb gives rise to error it is not only absurd; it is also dangerous. When people say—

A Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing—They make that a reason not for learning more, but for learning less.

Love Me, Love My Dog.—If I go a-courting, and my ladylove bids me love her scented, dyspeptic poodle, which is not necessary to her health and comfort, must I not much more love her glass eye and false teeth and hair, which are? Yet common sense revolts at the notion, and I therefore assume that a proverb which, logically treated, makes such unreasonable demands on my affections is wrong and absurd.

Seeing Is Believing.—How can any reflecting person repeat these words? For very often we believe we see what really we do not. If a conjurer were to take this proverb as his motto, every one would see its absurdity. A straight stick, half submerged in water looks crooked. Fortunately, another proverb says, "Trust not to appearances." And this brings us to the exquisite absurdity of popular proverbs which run in contradictory pairs and support both sides of an argument. Thus one proverb says, "Look before you leap;" another, "Who hesitates is lost." Sometimes we hear that "Second thoughts are best;" at other times that "Delays are dangerous." The desperate man relies on "Nothing venture, nothing have;" the cautious man on "Never venture out of your depth till you can swim." The impatient matrimonial candidate believes that "Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing;" the tardy one that one may "Marry in haste and repent at leisure." And so on ad infinitum. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—"Out of sight, out of mind." "It's never too late to mend"—"A fool at 40 will never be wise." "Too many cooks spoil the broth"—"There's safety in numbers" and "Two heads are better than one."

Therefore, let us examine our proverbial coinage before we pass it into the moral currency.

Change Wanted.

What some people need more than anything, else is change—they have dollars, and they need sense.—Jewish Comment.

PEOPLE WHO GAMBLE.

Chinese and Italians Especially Addicted to Games of Chance.

Of all the nations of the earth who gamble—and they all do it more or less—the Chinese come in an easy first. Superstition and the gambling mania go in double harness, and while the mandarins fly kites to decide what should be done about Wei-Hai-Wei and Talien-Wan the humbler Celestials gamble for dear life to pass the time away. "The Chinese play night and day," says a traveler, "till they have lost all they are worth, and then they usually go and hang themselves," from which it would appear that the yellow danger is not so formidable after all.

The Chinese laborers in the United States squander their earnings in a game called "white pigeon's ticket." White, by the way, is the unlucky color for the gamer and the lucky one for the keeper of the gaming house. These gentry keep orange peel in a box, believing that it will bring them luck.

The Italians are no less superstitious, and they gamble persistently, the poor people especially, in the government lotteries. Everything has a number; a cat, a dog, a gondola, and the "Libro dei Sogno"—the lotto player's oracle—will tell you what the number is and the rules for interpreting the appearances in dreams. Visitors to Venice, which has always been a stronghold of gambling, may have seen the declaration of the winning figures from the Campanile of St. Mark's—the silent, eager crowd gathered in the square and the group of officials gathered round the boy with the bandaged eyes who draws the numbers from the cage.

There is a story told in Venice of a madman who hailed a gondolier from the window of the madhouse on the island to tell him the numbers he had dreamed. The man put his money on them and won, and from that day to this the gondoliers go near the window as they pass in the hope that the madman will call again. The story is true.—London Chronicle.

VORACIOUS LITTLE ROBINS.

Each Required Fourteen Yards of Angleworms Every Day.

A would be philanthropist relates his experiences trying to play mother to a nest of little robins, which had by some accident been deprived of their rightful mother's care. He diligently set to work digging angleworms, and supposed that he was fulfilling his whole duty, when one of the poor little songsters died. Upon examination of the body, which was reduced to skin and bone, the foster parent came to the conclusion that it must have died of starvation.

Deeply grieved at his shortcoming, he redoubled his efforts, determined to at least save the other two. It was not long, however, before a second one died, evidently of the same malady. The good man then resolved that, whatever the third one died of, it should not be starvation, and took off his coat and went to work in earnest. He kept on with the angleworm diet until he found that his one little bird was consuming from 14 to 18 yards of angleworms a day. This was too much for his patience, and he proceeded to substitute the more easily managed diet of bread and milk and other delicacies, which were, however, not nearly so much to Miss Robin's taste.

Wanting to discover whether he had been catering to a family of abnormal appetites, our friend took to watching the methods of a real mother bird and found that she fed her young every two minutes. He then consulted the learned books upon birds and discovered that 14 yards of worms a day, with meals every two minutes, is the average rate of feeding fledgelings. He has therefore decided that he does not care to take up raising birds by hand as a business.—Boston Transcript.

He Got the Ad.

"You're not on that horrid paper, are you," cried the girl who speaks her mind, "though I did once meet a reporter from it who was rather nice? He came to see about getting an advertisement— What! Not a reporter? Why, I thought he was. Well, anyway I had lost a dog, and he said he had heard of it and wanted to know if I didn't want to advertise in his paper for it. I told him I didn't believe I liked his old paper, and he said he didn't think much of it himself, but he thought it was pretty apt to reach the class of people who stole dogs. And so since he was so polite about it I thought I might as well advertise in it. But I didn't get the dog."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Show Your Best Qualities.

Honesty does not require us to hang our oil paintings faced to the wall in order that our friends may see that they are made on coarse canvas. It is right to appear always at our best. Give the world your brightest thoughts, your most courteous speech, the outcome of your kindest impulses and purest motives, no matter if you are conscious that these things are above your ordinary level. God made the flowers show their colors, not their dull, fibrous matter; to load the air with their odors, not with the rankness of their sap.—Homiletic Review.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Gov. Lind has vetoed the Anoka-Hastings asylum bill.

The bill to increase the term of county auditor from two to four years will probably become a law.

The Daily East Grand Forks Courier is only two years old, but it is one of the best papers published in the Northwest.

The best thing the citizens of any town can do is to give a hearty support to the enterprises already located there.

Admiral Dewey, being interviewed regarding the suggestion that he be made a candidate for the president of the United States next year, says:

"I am a sailor. A sailor has no politics. The administration is his party, and, Republican or Democratic, it makes no difference."

POPULATION OF THE U. S.

Some of our thoughtful statisticians are predicting that there will be great disappointment when the population of the United States is announced at the close of the next census. It will be remembered that there was great surprise when the returns of the census of 1890 came in and gave us only 62,000,000 instead of the 70,000,000 we had claimed. No good reason exists for believing that the growth during the last ten years has been more rapid than from 1880 to 1890. In fact, there has been a considerable falling off in immigration. The total number of immigrants during the ten years from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, was 5,248,568, and the total number arriving from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, was 3,539,435. Estimating the arrivals during the present year to equal those of the two last and adding 230,000 to the above total, the population has been increased 3,769,435 from abroad during the last decade.

Public speakers are in the habit of proclaiming our population to be about 75,000,000. The treasury department in making its percentages of commerce, circulation, etc., etc., bases its circulations upon an estimated population of 75,465,000 on the first of January, 1899. Last year an almanacmaker in New York obtained estimates from the governors of all the states, which aggregated 77,803,231. The almanacs and statisticians vary all the way from 70,000,000 to 85,000,000 population.

The increase from 1870 to 1880 was about 12,000,000; the increase from 1880 to 1890 was about 12,000,000, and, adding 12,000,000 to the total returned by the last census, we have 74,622,250.—Chicago Record.

There have been a constant clamor from Gov. Lind's new appointees for an increase in appropriations for their respective departments. Mr. Pope, the public examiner, says he cannot get along with the funds at his disposal and wants more money than the law allows. Mr. Bowler, the dairy and food commissioner, wanted the appropriation for his department raised to $25,000 but the legislature turned down his request because it was unnecessary. The state departments have been doing good work under Republican administration on an economical basis and there seems to be little reason why the appropriations should now be materially increased.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Devils Lake Inter-Ocean: It may not be generally known here, but it is being advertised throughout the East that at Medora, N. D., there is in successful operation a factory engaged in canning horseflesh for human food. This flourishing industry suggests others no less revolting. For instance, capital might find profitable investment in canning prairie wolves and dog meat as delicacies for our noble red men. Or, to reach out to the Orient, a big trade might be worked up in China for a superior article of canned gophers, another product of our prairies. Poor North Dakota! She had the divorce law. That blot was no sooner erased from her escutcheon, than along comes the horse meat stain to mar the beauty of her emblem.

A Surprise Party.

Last Friday afternoon was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. L. E Maxwell and Mrs. Chris Paulson and the latter opened her house to a few friends in honor of the occasion. In the evening a goodly number walked into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and informed the lady that they had heard it was her birthday and that they had invited themselves there to spend the evening and for her to sit still and let them run things, which they did to the satisfaction of all. An elegant lunch was served and a number of valuable presents were given. They departed at a late hour. All joined in the remark that it was the pleasantest evening ever spent at a surprise party.

Died.

Last Thursday, April 6, at 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. D. Brown died. The deceased had been sick for some time of consumption and death was not unexpected. She had been a resident of this city for a number of years, her maiden name being Clara Lilleman. The funeral services were held Saturday and were very largely attended.

WORK BEGUN

The New Saw Mill Now Being Built.

Chas. J. Winton, L. N. Anson, John O'Day and John Landers, four of the gentlemen interested in the saw mill at this place, arrived in the city last Saturday from Wisconsin. The two first named gentlemen went back Monday.

They have caused work to be commenced in the errection of the new mill which they propose to build. It will have a capacity of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 feet and will contain one band saw, a re-saw and a circular saw. It is expected to have it completed sometime during the latter part of May, and will be run day and night for the remaining part of the season, giving employment to over 300 men.

The new firm has as members some of the most wealthy lumbermen of Wisconsin, and they propose to do business and a lots of it. They will log winter and summer, thus keeping a large number of men at work up at the lake while the mill is running here. The lumber yards in this city will be enlarged and fenced in. A new plaining mill will be built in the fall which will probably be located upon the east side of the river. A bridge will be built across the river at Kretzschmar's dam in order to run cars across the river.

How to Avoid Colds.

Colds can be avoided by proper attention to bodily conditions. The lungs are highly susceptible to all variations of the atmosphere, and hence we breathe the germs of disease unconsciously. Air should be inhaled through the nose instead of the mouth. In walking we should breathe slowly, allowing the oxygen of the air as much time to escape as to enter the system. Then we should do everything possible to strengthen the lungs. Calisthenics is an important aid in this direction. We should practice from a half to three-quarters of an hour daily. Always be careful not to exercise too violently. The grip is nothing more than a cold in an advanced stage.

How to Bake Cauliflower.

Boil tender, but not until it breaks. Split down the middle with a sharp knife. Lay the cut sides downward in a baking dish. Pour over and about it a large cupful of drawn butter, sift fine crumbs on top and set in the oven until it begins to brown. Serve in a baking dish. Pass vinegar or cut lemon with it.

How to Make English Stew.

This is an excellent preparation of cold meat, which is first cut in slices and then sprinkled with pepper, salt and flour. Lay them in a dish and on them place a few pickles of any kind or a small quantity of pickled cabbage. Take a teacup half full of water. Add to it a small quantity of the pickle vinegar or a small quantity of catchup and any gravy that may be set by for use. Stir all together and pour it over the meat and set it in the oven for about half an hour and serve hot.

How to Preserve the Teeth.

Take one pound of stale bread, parch until black and ready to crumble, then place into a mortar or wooden bowl and pound to a powder. When thoroughly pulverized it is ready for use. Keep in a dry box and apply to the teeth with a wet brush. This prevents decay and leaves the teeth pearly and white.

How to Broil Halibut.

Slices of halibut, salt, pepper, butter. Cut the slices of fish about an inch thick, season with pepper and salt and lay them in melted butter one-half hour, allowing three tablespoonfuls of butter to a pound of fish; then roll them in flour and boil about 20 minutes. Serve very hot.

How to Remove Freckles.

Five cents' worth red precipitate, 10 cents' worth Venice turpentine, one pound lard. Mix well together and apply at night after washing face and hands in warm water. In a short time all the freckles will disappear, leaving the face smooth and lovely.

Enterprising.

Irate Business Man (white with anger at being disturbed)—You book agents make me so angry with your confounded nerve and impudence that I cannot find words to express my indignation.

Book Agent (jumping with enthusiasm)—Then, sir, you are in luck. I have here the very thing you need—a dictionary of the English language, containing all the words and slang phrases known, and only 5 shillings. Take it, and you will never be at a loss to express yourself again.—London Tit-Bits.

Irving Didn't Read.

Sir Henry Irving appeared at the Theater Royal, Edinburgh, in 1857, and two years later he went to Linlithgow to give a reading there. He was delighted to see his name in big letters on the posters on arriving in the town. He went to the hall, but there was no crowd there—in fact, the caretaker had not arrived, having forgotten all about the reading. Irving went in search of him, and things were got ready; 8:30 o'clock arrived, but no one came to the hall—not even a small boy. In recalling the incident Sir Henry was wont to say, "I never slept better than I did that night."

Its Natural Effect.

"How many of these sheep got out of here?" asked the angry farmer.

"I don't know," replied the new hired man, rubbing his eyes. "After I'd watched five or six of 'em jump over the fence I seemed to lose the count. That always puts me to sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Of No Avail.

"Prisoner," said the court, "have you anything to say for yourself?"

"What's the use?" replied the culprit; "you guys wouldn't believe me."—Philadelphia North American.

In 1666 the great fire in London burned over 436 acres, destroying at least $35,000,000 worth of property. In 1872 the Boston fire burned over 60 acres, at a loss of $1,000,000 an acre. If the same fire occurred today, it would cost, at the very lowest estimate, $100,000,000. In 1893 the loss on the 3¼ acres burned over was over $350,000,000.

POPULAR PROVERBS

SOME THAT ARE FAIRLY BRIMFUL OF ABSURDITY.

Maxims Often Quoted and at Times Advanced as Argument Which Have Neither Wit Nor Wisdom to Commend Them—Contradictory Sayings.

There is a mistaken notion abroad, says a writer in London Tit-Bits, that proverbs are epitomes of wisdom, the concentrated experience of generations, and that to quote one of them in a discussion is to advance an unanswerable argument. And yet what is there to recommend many of them beyond their jingle? Take our familiar friend:

Early to Bed and Early to Rise, Makes a Man Healthy, Wealthy and Wise.—Obviously, the main idea was to find a word to rhyme with "rise," and "wise" was the unfortunate word chosen. And now, trustful little boys are persuaded to go to bed at unreasonably early hours in the hope of becoming a sort of Sandow-Rothschild-Solomon, though we all know milkmen and market gardeners who get up at 5 a. m. and are neither rich nor clever, and members of parliament who go to bed late and are, if not clever, at least not poor and infirm. Since the invention of gas and electric light this ridiculous old proverb has outlived its original modicum of truth, and proves we must not venerate proverbs on account of their hoary antiquity.

The Early Bird Catches the Worm.—The mistake made here is that it assumes we are all birds. But some of us are worms. If we were not, what would become of the birds? And, therefore, while the birds do well to be early, let the worms be late—the later the better.

The Pitcher That Goes Oft to the Well Is Broken at Last.—Note, it does not say "is broken first," but "is broken at last." Of course, every pitcher, whether it goes to the well or stays on the shelf, is broken at last, and the only result of this absurd proverb is to encourage lazy folk to do as little work as possible and unnecessarily keep out of harm's way.

If You Want a Thing Well Done, Do It Yourself.—There's shocking bad advice with which to start a youth on life's journey. If he wants a button well sewed on, he's to do it himself; if he wants his hair well cut, he's to cut it himself. He must mend his own chairs, shoe his own nag, darn his own socks. In short, from buying a horse to blacking his boots, he must do it himself. Poor fellow!

A Contented Mind Is a Continual Feast.—Can any one say what that means? Does it mean that the owner continually feasts on his contented mind or that the contented mind is continually feasting? Probably the latter, as we sometimes hear that "a hungry man's an angry man," and we all know that a satisfied appetite is the source of contentment. Hence it is not the contented mind which makes the feast, as the silly proverb implies, but the continual feast which produces the contented mind.

There's No Rule Without an Exception.—This is not only a proverb; it is also a rule. But obviously there is no exception to this rule, because if there were a rule with an exception this proberb would be untrue. But the proverb is a rule which has no exception, which, as Mr. Euclid would say, is absurd. Which was to be shown.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss, 'Tis Folly to Be Wise.—For oracular stupidity this proverb may be classed with the one about the pitcher. Granting it true, the difficulty is to know where ignorance is bliss and of course the proverb gives no assistance where it is most needed. Most people quote it as "ignorance is bliss," in their blissful ignorance, but if a proverb gives rise to error it is not only absurd; it is also dangerous. When people say—

A Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing—They make that a reason not for learning more, but for learning less.

Love Me, Love My Dog.—If I go a-courting, and my ladylove bids me love her scented, dyspeptic poodle, which is not necessary to her health and comfort, must I not much more love her glass eye and false teeth and hair, which are? Yet common sense revolts at the notion, and I therefore assume that a proverb which, logically treated, makes such unreasonable demands on my affections is wrong and absurd.

Seeing Is Believing.—How can any reflecting person repeat these words? For very often we believe we see what really we do not. If a conjurer were to take this proverb as his motto, every one would see its absurdity. A straight stick half submerged in water looks crooked. Fortunately, another proverb says, "Trust not to appearances." And this brings us to the exquisite absurdity of popular proverbs which run in contradictory pairs and support both sides of an argument. Thus one proverb says, "Look before you leap;" another, "Who hesitates is lost." Sometimes we hear that "Second thoughts are best;" at other times that "Delays are dangerous." The desperate man relies on "Nothing venture, nothing have;" the cautious man on "Never venture out of your depth till you can swim." The impatient matrimonial candidate believes that "Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing;" the tardy one that one may "Marry in haste and repent at leisure." And so on ad infinitum. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—"Out of sight, out of mind." "It's never too late to mend"—"A fool at 40 will never be wise." "Too many cooks spoil the broth"—"There's safety in numbers" and "Two heads are better than one."

Therefore, let us examine our proverbial coinage before we pass it into the moral currency.

Change Wanted.

What some people need more than anything else is change—they have dollars, and they need sense.—Jewish Comment.

PEOPLE WHO GAMBLE.

Chinese and Italians Especially Addicted to Games of Chance.

Of all the nations of the earth who gamble—and they all do it more or less—the Chinese come in an easy first. Superstition and the gambling mania go in double harness, and while the mandarins fly kites to decide what should be done about Wei-Hai-Wei and Talien-Wan the humbler Celestials gamble for dear life to pass the time away. "The Chinese play night and day," says a traveler, "till they have lost all they are worth, and then they usually go and hang themselves," from which it would appear that the yellow danger is not so formidable after all.

The Chinese laborers in the United States squander their earnings in a game called "white pigeon's ticket." White, by the way, is the unlucky color for the gamer and the lucky one for the keeper of the gaming house. These gentry keep orange peel in a box, believing that it will bring them luck.

The Italians are no less superstitious, and they gamble persistently, the poor people especially, in the government lotteries. Everything has a number; a cat, a dog, a gondola, and the "Libro del Sogno"—the lotto player's oracle—will tell you what the number is and the rules for interpreting the appearances in dreams. Visitors to Venice, which has always been a stronghold of gambling, may have seen the declaration of the winning figures from the Campanile of St. Mark's—the silent, eager crowd gathered in the square and the group of officials gathered round the boy with the bandaged eyes who draws the numbers from the cage.

There is a story told in Venice of a madman who hailed a gondolier from the window of the madhouse on the island to tell him the numbers he had dreamed. The man put his money on them and won, and from that day to this the gondoliers go near the window as they pass in the hope that the madman will call again. The story is true.—London Chronicle.

VORACIOUS LITTLE ROBINS.

Each Required Fourteen Yards of Angleworms Every Day.

A would be philanthropist relates his experiences trying to play mother to a nest of little robins, which had by some accident been deprived of their rightful mother's care. He diligently set to work digging angleworms, and supposed that he was fulfilling his whole duty, when one of the poor little songsters died. Upon examination of the body, which was reduced to skin and bone, the foster parent came to the conclusion that it must have died of starvation.

Deeply grieved at his shortcoming, he redoubled his efforts, determined to at least save the other two. It was not long, however, before a second one died, evidently of the same malady. The good man then resolved that, whatever the third one died of, it should not be starvation, and took off his coat and went to work in earnest. He kept on with the angleworm diet until he found that his one little bird was consuming from 14 to 18 yards of angleworms a day. This was too much for his patience, and he proceeded to substitute the more easily managed diet of bread and milk and other delicacies, which were, however, not nearly so much to Miss Robin's taste.

Wanting to discover whether he had been catering to a family of abnormal appetites, our friend took to watching the methods of a real mother bird and found that she fed her young every two minutes. He then consulted the learned books upon birds and discovered that 14 yards of worms a day, with meals every two minutes, is the average rate of feeding fledgelings. He has therefore decided that he does not care to take up raising birds by hand as a business.—Boston Transcript.

He Got the Ad.

"You're not on that horrid paper, are you," cried the girl who speaks her mind, "though I did once meet a reporter from it, who was rather nice? He came to see about getting an advertisement— What! Not a reporter? Why, I thought he was. Well, anyway I had lost a dog, and he said he had heard of it and wanted to know if I didn't want to advertise in his paper for it. I told him I didn't believe I liked his old paper, and he said he didn't think much of it himself, but he thought it was pretty apt to reach the class of people who stole dogs. And so since he was so polite about it I thought I might as well advertise in it. But I didn't get the dog."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Show Your Best Qualities.

Honesty does not require us to hang our oil paintings faced to the wall in order that our friends may see that they are made on course canvas. It is right to appear always at our best. Give the world your brightest thoughts, your most courteous speech, the outcome of your kindest impulses and purest motives, no matter if you are conscious that these things are above your ordinary level. God made the flowers show their colors, not their dull, fibrous matter; to load the air with their odors, not with the rankness of their sap.—Homiletic Review.

Romance Versus Reality.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Gov. Lind has vetoed the Anoka-Hastings asylum bill.

The bill to increase the term of county auditor from two to four years will probably become a law.

The Daily East Grand Forks Courier is only two years old, but it is one of the best papers published in the Northwest.

The best thing the citizens of any town can do is to give a hearty support to the enterprises already located there.

Admiral Dewey, being interviewed regarding the suggestion that he be made a candidate for the president of the United States next year, says:

"I am a sailor. A sailor has no politics. The administration is his party, and, Republican or Democratic, it makes no difference."

POPULATION OF THE U. S.

Some of our thoughtful statisticians are predicting that there will be great disappointment when the population of the United States is announced at the close of the next census. It will be remembered that there was great surprise when the returns of the census of 1890 came in and gave us only 62,000,000 instead of the 70,000,000 we had claimed. No good reason exists for believing that the growth during the last ten years has been more rapid than from 1880 to 1890. In fact, there has been a considerable falling off in immigration. The total number of immigrants during the ten years from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, was 5,248,568, and the total number arriving from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, was 3,539,435. Estimating the arrivals during the present year to equal those of the two last and adding 230,000 to the above total, the population has been increased 3,769,435 from abroad during the last decade.

Public speakers are in the habit of proclaiming our population to be about 75,000,000. The treasury department in making its percentages of commerce, circulation, etc., etc., bases its circulations upon an estimated population of 75,465,000 on the first of January, 1899. Last year an almanacmaker in New York obtained estimates from the governors of all the states, which aggregated 77,803,231. The almanacs and statisticians vary all the way from 70,000,000 to 85,000,000 population.

The increase from 1870 to 1880 was about 12,000,000; the increase from 1880 to 1890 was about 12,000,000, and, adding 12,000,000 to the total returned by the last census, we have 74,622,250.—Chicago Record.

Exchange Sayings.

Over at Rat Portage a brewer lables his brands "Sultana lager," "Mikado pale ale" and "Regina porter" after the three gold mines on the Lake of the Woods. To be filled with this article of booze is calculated to make the boozer feel as rich as the mine owners.—Roseau Times.

There have been a constant clamor from Gov. Lind's new appointees for an increase in appropriations for their respective departments. Mr. Pope, the public examiner, says he cannot get along with the funds at his disposal and wants more money than the law allows. Mr. Bowler, the dairy and food commissioner, wanted the appropriation for his department raised to $25,000 but the legislature turned down his request because it was unnecessary. The state departments have been doing good work under Republican administration on an economical basis and there seems to be little reason why the appropriations should now be materially increased.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Devils Lake Inter-Ocean: It may not be generally known here, but it is being advertised throughout the East that at Medora, N. D., there is in successful operation a factory engaged in canning horseflesh for human food. This flourishing industry suggests others no less revolting. For instance, capital might find profitable investment in canning prairie wolves and dog meat as delicacies for our noble red men. Or, to reach out to the Orient, a big trade might be worked up in China for a superior article of canned gophers, another product of our prairies. Poor North Dakota! She had the divorce law. That blot was no sooner erased from her escutcheon, than along comes the horse meat stain to mar the beauty of her emblem.

A Surprise Party.

Last Friday afternoon was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. L. E. Maxwell and Mrs. Chris Paulson and the latter opened her house to a few friends in honor of the occasion. In the evening a goodly number walked into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and informed the lady that they had heard it was her birthday and that they had invited themselves there to spend the evening and for her to sit still and let them run things, which they did to the satisfaction of all. An elegant lunch was served and a number of valuable presents were given. They departed at a late hour. All joined in the remark that it was the pleasantest evening ever spent at a surprise party.

Died.

Last Thursday, April 6, at 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. D. Brown died. The deceased had been sick for some time of consumption and death was not unexpected. She had been a resident of this city for a number of years, her maiden name being Clara Lilleman. The funeral services were held Saturday and were very largely attended.

WORK BEGUN

The New Saw Mill Now Being Built.

Chas. J. Winton, L. N. Anson, John O'Day and John Landers, four of the gentlemen interested in the saw mill at this place, arrived in the city last Saturday from Wisconsin. The two first named gentlemen went back Monday.

They have caused work to be commenced in the errection of the new mill which they propose to build. It will have a capacity of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 feet and will contain one band saw, a re-saw and a circular saw. It is expected to have it completed sometime during the latter part of May, and will be run day and night for the remaining part of the season, giving employment to over 300 men.

The new firm has as members some of the most wealthy lumbermen of Wisconsin, and they propose to do business and a lots of it. They will log winter and summer, thus keeping a large number of men at work up at the lake while the mill is running here. The lumber yards in this city will be enlarged and fenced in. A new plaining mill will be built in the fall which will probably be located upon the east side of the river. A bridge will be built across the river at Kretzschmar's dam in order to run cars across the river.

How to Avoid Colds.

Colds can be avoided by proper attention to bodily conditions. The lungs are highly susceptible to all variations of the atmosphere, and hence we breathe the germs of disease unconsciously. Air should be inhaled through the nose instead of the mouth. In walking we should breathe slowly, allowing the oxygen of the air as much time to escape as to enter the system. Then we should do everything possible to strengthen the lungs. Calisthenics is an important aid in this direction. We should practice from a half to three-quarters of an hour daily. Always be careful not to exercise too violently. The grip is nothing more than a cold in an advanced stage.

How to Bake Cauliflower.

Boil tender, but not until it breaks. Split down the middle with a sharp knife. Lay the cut sides downward in a baking dish. Pour over and about it a large cupful of drawn butter, sift fine crumbs on top and set in the oven until it begins to brown. Serve in a baking dish. Pass vinegar or cut lemon with it.

How to Make English Stew.

This is an excellent preparation of cold meat, which is first cut in slices and then sprinkled with pepper, salt and flour. Lay them in a dish and on them place a few pickles of any kind or a small quantity of pickled cabbage. Take a teacup half full of water. Add to it a small quantity of the pickle vinegar or a small quantity of catchup and any gravy that may be set by for use. Stir all together and pour it over the meat and set it in the oven for about half an hour and serve hot.

How to Preserve the Teeth.

Take one pound of stale bread, parch until black and ready to crumble, then place into a mortar or wooden bowl and pound to a powder. When thoroughly pulverized it is ready for use. Keep in a dry box and apply to the teeth with a wet brush. This prevents decay and leaves the teeth pearly and white.

How to Broil Halibut.

Slices of halibut, salt, pepper, butter. Cut the slices of fish about an inch thick, season with pepper and salt and lay them in melted butter one-half hour, allowing three tablespoonfuls of butter to a pound of fish; then roll them in flour and boil about 20 minutes. Serve very hot.

How to Remove Freckles.

Five cents' worth red precipitate, 10 cents' worth Venice turpentine, one pound lard. Mix well together and apply at night after washing face and hands in warm water. In a short time all the freckles will disappear, leaving the face smooth and lovely.

Irving Didn't Read.

Sir Henry Irving appeared at the Theater Royal, Edinburgh, in 1857, and two years later he went to Linlithgow to give a reading there. He was delighted to see his name in big letters on the posters on arriving in the town. He went to the hall, but there was no crowd there—in fact, the caretaker had not arrived, having forgotten all about the reading. Irving went in search of him, and things were got ready; 8:30 o'clock arrived, but no one came to the hall—not even a small boy. In recalling the incident Sir Henry was wont to say, "I never slept better than I did that night."

Its Natural Effect.

"How many of these sheep got out of here?" asked the angry farmer.

"I don't know," replied the new hired man, rubbing his eyes. "After I'd watched five or six of 'em jump over the fence I seemed to lose the count. That always puts me to sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Of No Avail.

"Prisoner," said the court, "have you anything to say for yourself?"

"What's the use?" replied the culprit; "you guys wouldn't believe me."—Philadelphia North American.

In 1666 the great fire in London burned over 436 acres, destroying at least $35,000,000 worth of property. In 1872 the Boston fire burned over 60 acres, at a loss of $1,000,000 an acre. If the same fire occurred today, it would cost, at the very lowest estimate, $100,000,000. In 1893 the loss on the 3⅝ acres burned over was over $350,000,000.

POPULAR PROVERBS

SOME THAT ARE FAIRLY BRIMFUL OF ABSURDITY.

Maxims Often Quoted and at Times Advanced as Argument Which Have Neither Wit Nor Wisdom to Commend Them—Contradictory Sayings.

There is a mistaken notion abroad, says a writer in London Tit-Bits, that proverbs are epitomes of wisdom, the concentrated experience of generations, and that to quote one of them in a discussion is to advance an unanswerable argument. And yet what is there to recommend many of them beyond their jingle? Take our familiar friend:

Early to Bed and Early to Rise, Makes a Man Healthy, Wealthy and Wise.—Obviously, the main idea was to find a word to rhyme with "rise," and "wise" was the unfortunate word chosen. And now, trustful little boys are persuaded to go to bed at unreasonably early hours in the hope of becoming a sort of Sandow-Rothschild-Solomon, though we all know milkmen and market gardeners who get up at 5 a. m. and are neither rich nor clever, and members of parliament who go to bed late and are, if not clever, at least not poor and infirm. Since the invention of gas and electric light this ridiculous old proverb has outlived its original modicum of truth, and proves we must not venerate proverbs on account of their hoary antiquity.

The Early Bird Catches the Worm.—The mistake made here is that it assumes we are all birds. But some of us are worms. If we were not, what would become of the birds? And, therefore, while the birds do well to be early, let the worms be late—the later the better.

The Pitcher That Goes Oft to the Well Is Broken at Last.—Note, it does not say "is broken first," but "is broken at last." Of course, every pitcher, whether it goes to the well or stays on the shelf, is broken at last, and the only result of this absurd proverb is to encourage lazy folk to do as little work as possible and unnecessarily keep out of harm's way.

If You Want a Thing Well Done, Do It Yourself.—There's shocking bad advice with which to start a youth on life's journey. If he wants a button well sowed on, he's to do it himself; if he wants his hair well cut, he's to cut it himself. He must mend his own chairs, shoe his own nag, darn his own socks. In short, from buying a horse to blacking his boots, he must do it himself. Poor fellow!

A Contented Mind Is a Continual Feast.—Can any one say what that means? Does it mean that the owner continually feasts on his contented mind or that the contented mind is continually feasting? Probably the latter, as we sometimes hear that "a hungry man's an angry man," and we all know that a satisfied appetite is the source of contentment. Hence it is not the contented mind which makes the feast, as the silly proverb implies, but the continual feast which produces the contented mind.

There's No Rule Without an Exception.—This is not only a proverb; it is also a rule. But obviously there is no exception to this rule, because if there were a rule with an exception this proberb would be untrue. But the proverb is a rule which has no exception, which, as Mr. Euclid would say, is absurd. Which was to be shown.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss, 'Tis Folly to Be Wise.—For oracular stupidity this proverb may be classed with the one about the pitcher. Granting it true, the difficulty is to know where ignorance is bliss and of course the proverb gives no assistance where it is most needed. Most people quote it as "ignorance is bliss," in their blissful ignorance, but if a proverb gives rise to error it is not only absurd; it is also dangerous. When people say—

A Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing—They make that a reason not for learning more, but for learning less.

Love Me, Love My Dog.—If I go a-courting, and my ladylove bids me love her scented, dyspeptic poodle, which is not necessary to her health and comfort, must I not much more love her glass eye and false teeth and hair, which are? Yet common sense revolts at the notion, and I therefore assume that a proverb which, logically treated, makes such unreasonable demands on my affections is wrong and absurd.

Seeing Is Believing.—How can any reflecting person repeat these words? For very often we believe we see what really we do not. If a conjurer were to take this proverb as his motto, every one would see its absurdity. A straight stick half submerged in water looks crooked. Fortunately, another proverb says, "Trust not to appearances." And this brings us to the exquisite absurdity of popular proverbs which run in contradictory pairs and support both sides of an argument. Thus one proverb says, "Look before you leap;" another, "Who hesitates is lost." Sometimes we hear that "Second thoughts are best;" at other times that "Delays are dangerous." The desperate man relies on "Nothing venture, nothing have;" the cautious man on "Never venture out of your depth till you can swim." The impatient matrimonial candidate believes that "Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing;" the tardy one that one may "Marry in haste and repent at leisure." And so on ad infinitum. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—"Out of sight, out of mind." "It's never too late to mend"—"A fool at 40 will never be wise." "Too many cooks spoil the broth"—"There's safety in numbers" and "Two heads are better than one."

Therefore, let us examine our proverbial coinage before we pass it into the moral currency.

Change Wanted.

What some people need more than anything else is change—they have dollars, and they need sense.—Jewish Comment.

PEOPLE WHO GAMBLE.

Chinese and Italians Especially Addicted to Games of Chance.

Of all the nations of the earth who gamble—and they all do it more or less—the Chinese come in an easy first. Superstition and the gambling mania go in double harness, and while the mandarins fly kites to decide what should be done about Wei-Hai-Wei and Talien-Wan the humbler Celestials gamble for dear life to pass the time away. "The Chinese play night and day," says a traveler, "till they have lost all they are worth, and then they usually go and hang themselves," from which it would appear that the yellow danger is not so formidable after all.

The Chinese laborers in the United States squander their earnings in a game called "white pigeon's ticket." White, by the way, is the unlucky color for the gamer and the lucky one for the keeper of the gaming house. These gentry keep orange peel in a box, believing that it will bring them luck.

The Italians are no less superstitious, and they gamble persistently, the poor people especially, in the government lotteries. Everything has a number; a cat, a dog, a gondola, and the "Libro dei Sogno"—the lotto player's oracle—will tell you what the number is and the rules for interpreting the appearances in dreams. Visitors to Venice, which has always been a stronghold of gambling, may have seen the declaration of the winning figures from the Campanile of St. Mark's—the silent, eager crowd gathered in the square and the group of officials gathered round the boy with the bandaged eyes who draws the numbers from the cage.

There is a story told in Venice of a madman who hailed a gondolier from the window of the madhouse on the island to tell him the numbers he had dreamed. The man put his money on them and won, and from that day to this the gondoliers go near the window as they pass in the hope that the madman will call again. The story is true.—London Chronicle.

VORACIOUS LITTLE ROBINS.

Each Required Fourteen Yards of Angleworms Every Day.

A would be philanthropist relates his experiences trying to play mother to a nest of little robins, which had by some accident been deprived of their rightful mother's care. He diligently set to work digging angleworms, and supposed that he was fulfilling his whole duty, when one of the poor little songsters died. Upon examination of the body, which was reduced to skin and bone, the foster parent came to the conclusion that it must have died of starvation.

Deeply grieved at his shortcoming, he redoubled his efforts, determined to at least save the other two. It was not long, however, before a second one died, evidently of the same malady. The good man then resolved that, whatever the third one died of, it should not be starvation, and took off his coat and went to work in earnest. He kept on with the angleworm diet until he found that his one little bird was consuming from 14 to 18 yards of angleworms a day. This was too much for his patience, and he proceeded to substitute the more easily managed diet of bread and milk and other delicacies, which were, however, not nearly so much to Miss Robin's taste.

Wanting to discover whether he had been catering to a family of abnormal appetites, our friend took to watching the methods of a real mother bird and found that she fed her young every two minutes. He then consulted the learned books upon birds and discovered that 14 yards of worms a day, with meals every two minutes, is the average rate of feeding fledgelings. He has therefore decided that he does not care to take up raising birds by hand as a business.—Boston Transcript.

He Got the Ad.

"You're not on that horrid paper, are you," cried the girl who speaks her mind, "though I did once meet a reporter from it who was rather nice? He came to see about getting an advertisement— What! Not a reporter? Why, I thought he was. Well, anyway I had lost a dog, and he said he had heard of it and wanted to know if I didn't want to advertise in his paper for it. I told him I didn't believe I liked his old paper, and he said he didn't think much of it himself, but he thought it was pretty apt to reach the class of people who stole dogs. And so since he was so polite about it I thought I might as well advertise in it. But I didn't get the dog."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Show Your Best Qualities.

Honesty does not require us to hang our oil paintings faced to the wall in order that our friends may see that they are made on coarse canvas. It is right to appear always at our best. Give the world your brightest thoughts, your most courteous speech, the outcome of your kindest impulses and purest motives, no matter if you are conscious that these things are above your ordinary level. God made the flowers show their colors, not their dull, fibrous matter; to load the air with their odors, not with the rankness of their sap.—Homiletic Review.

Romance Versus Reality.

Gov. Lind has vetoed the Anoka-Hastings asylum bill.

The bill to increase the term of county auditor from two to four years will probably become a law.

The Daily East Grand Forks Courier is only two years old, but it is one of the best papers published in the Northwest.

The best thing the citizens of any town can do is to give a hearty support to the enterprises already located there.

Admiral Dewey, being interviewed regarding the suggestion that he be made a candidate for the president of the United States next year, says:

"I am a sailor. A sailor has no politics. The administration is his party, and, Republican or Democratic, it makes no difference."

POPULATION OF THE U. S.

Some of our thoughtful statisticians are predicting that there will be great disappointment when the population of the United States is announced at the close of the next census. It will be remembered that there was great surprise when the returns of the census of 1890 came in and gave us only 62,000,000 instead of the 70,000,000 we had claimed. No good reason exists for believing that the growth during the last ten years has been more rapid than from 1880 to 1890. In fact, there has been a considerable falling off in immigration. The total number of immigrants during the ten years from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, was 5,248,568, and the total number arriving from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, was 3,539,435. Estimating the arrivals during the present year to equal those of the two last and adding 230,000 to the above total, the population has been increased 3,769,435 from abroad during the last decade.

Public speakers are in the habit of proclaiming our population to be about 75,000,000. The treasury department in making its percentages of commerce, circulation, etc., etc., bases its circulations upon an estimated population of 75,465,000 on the first of January, 1899. Last year an almanacmaker in New York obtained estimates from the governors of all the states, which aggregated 77,803,231. The almanacs and statisticians vary all the way from 70,000,000 to 85,000,000 population.

The increase from 1870 to 1880 was about 12,000,000; the increase from 1880 to 1890 was about 12,000,000, and, adding 12,000,000 to the total returned by the last census, we have 74,622,250.—Chicago Record.

There have been a constant clamor from Gov. Lind's new appointees for an increase in appropriations for their respective departments. Mr. Pope, the public examiner, says he cannot get along with the funds at his disposal and wants more money than the law allows. Mr. Bowler, the dairy and food commissioner, wanted the appropriation for his department raised to $25,000 but the legislature turned down his request because it was unnecessary. The state departments have been doing good work under Republican administration on an economical basis and there seems to be little reason why the appropriations should now be materially increased.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Devils Lake Inter-Ocean: It may not be generally known here, but it is being advertised throughout the East that at Medora, N. D., there is in successful operation a factory engaged in canning horseflesh for human food. This flourishing industry suggests others no less revolting. For instance, capital might find profitable investment in canning prairie wolves and dog meat as delicacies for our noble red men. Or, to reach out to the Orient, a big trade might be worked up in China for a superior article of canned gophers, another product of our prairies. Poor North Dakota! She had the divorce law. That blot was no sooner erased from her escutcheon, than along comes the horse meat stain to mar the beauty of her emblem.

A Surprise Party.

Last Friday afternoon was the birthday anniversary of Mrs. L. E Maxwell and Mrs. Chris Paulson and the latter opened her house to a few friends in honor of the occasion. In the evening a goodly number walked into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell and informed the lady that they had heard it was her birthday and that they had invited themselves there to spend the evening and for her to sit still and let them run things, which they did to the satisfaction of all. An elegant lunch was served and a number of valuable presents were given. They departed at a late hour. All joined in the remark that it was the pleasantest evening ever spent at a surprise party.

Died.

Last Thursday, April 6, at 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. A. D. Brown died. The deceased had been sick for some time of consumption and death was not unexpected. She had been a resident of this city for a number of years, her maiden name being Clara Lilleman. The funeral services were held Saturday and were very largely attended.

WORK BEGUN

The New Saw Mill Now Being Built.

Chas. J. Winton, L. N. Anson, John O'Day and John Landers, four of the gentlemen interested in the saw mill at this place, arrived in the city last Saturday from Wisconsin. The two first named gentlemen went back Monday.

They have caused work to be commenced in the errection of the new mill which they propose to build. It will have a capacity of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 feet and will contain one band saw, a re-saw and a circular saw. It is expected to have it completed sometime during the latter part of May, and will be run day and night for the remaining part of the season, giving employment to over 300 men.

The new firm has as members some of the most wealthy lumbermen of Wisconsin, and they propose to do business and a lots of it. They will log winter and summer, thus keeping a large number of men at work up at the lake while the mill is running here. The lumber yards in this city will be enlarged and fenced in. A new plaining mill will be built in the fall which will probably be located upon the east side of the river. A bridge will be built across the river at Kretzschmar's dam in order to run cars across the river.

How to Avoid Colds.

Colds can be avoided by proper attention to bodily conditions. The lungs are highly susceptible to all variations of the atmosphere, and hence we breathe the germs of disease unconsciously. Air should be inhaled through the nose instead of the mouth. In walking we should breathe slowly, allowing the oxygen of the air as much time to escape as to enter the system. Then we should do everything possible to strengthen the lungs. Calisthenics is an important aid in this direction. We should practice from a half to three-quarters of an hour daily. Always be careful not to exercise too violently. The grip is nothing more than a cold in an advanced stage.

How to Bake Cauliflower.

Boil tender, but not until it breaks. Split down the middle with a sharp knife. Lay the cut sides downward in a baking dish. Pour over and about it a large cupful of drawn butter, sift fine crumbs on top and set in the oven until it begins to brown. Serve in a baking dish. Pass vinegar or cut lemon with it.

How to Make English Stew.

This is an excellent preparation of cold meat, which is first cut in slices and then sprinkled with pepper, salt and flour. Lay them in a dish and on them place a few pickles of any kind or a small quantity of pickled cabbage. Take a teacup half full of water. Add to it a small quantity of the pickle vinegar or a small quantity of catchup and any gravy that may be set by for use. Stir all together and pour it over the meat and set it in the oven for about half an hour and serve hot.

How to Preserve the Teeth.

Take one pound of stale bread, parch until black and ready to crumble, then place into a mortar or wooden bowl and pound to a powder. When thoroughly pulverized it is ready for use. Keep in a dry box and apply to the teeth with a wet brush. This prevents decay and leaves the teeth pearly and white.

How to Broil Halibut.

Slices of halibut, salt, pepper, butter. Cut the slices of fish about an inch thick, season with pepper and salt and lay them in melted butter one-half hour, allowing three tablespoonfuls of butter to a pound of fish; then roll them in flour and boil about 20 minutes. Serve very hot.

How to Remove Freckles.

Five cents' worth red precipitate, 10 cents' worth Venice turpentine, one pound lard. Mix well together and apply at night after washing face and hands in warm water. In a short time all the freckles will disappear, leaving the face smooth and lovely.

Whereas, It was thereupon ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition at a session of said board, commencing on the 27th day of March, A.D. 1899, at the county auditor's office in Red Lake Falls in said county; and

Irving Didn't Read.

Sir Henry Irving appeared at the Theater Royal, Edinburgh, in 1857, and two years later he went to Linlithgow to give a reading there. He was delighted to see his name in big letters on the posters on arriving in the town. He went to the hall, but there was no crowd there—in fact, the caretaker had not arrived, having forgotten all about the reading. Irving went in search of him, and things were got ready; 8:30 o'clock arrived, but no one came to the hall—not even a small boy. In recalling the incident Sir Henry was wont to say, "I never slept better than I did that night."

Its Natural Effect.

"How many of these sheep got out of here?" asked the angry farmer.

"I don't know," replied the new hired man, rubbing his eyes. "After I'd watched five or six of 'em jump over the fence I seemed to lose the count. That always puts me to sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Of No Avail.

"Prisoner," said the court, "have you anything to say for yourself?"

"What's the use?" replied the culprit; "you guys wouldn't believe me."—Philadelphia North American.

In 1666 the great fire in London burned over 436 acres, destroying at least $35,000,000 worth of property. In 1872 the Boston fire burned over 60 acres, at a loss of $1,000,000 an acre. If the same fire occurred today, it would cost, at the very lowest estimate, $100,000,000. In 1899 the loss on the 2¼ acres burned over was over $350,000,000.

POPULAR PROVERBS

SOME THAT ARE FAIRLY BRIMFUL OF ABSURDITY.

Maxims Often Quoted and at Times Advanced as Argument Which Have Neither Wit Nor Wisdom to Commend Them—Contradictory Sayings.

There is a mistaken notion abroad, says a writer in London Tit-Bits, that proverbs are epitomes of wisdom, the concentrated experience of generations, and that to quote one of them in a discussion is to advance an unanswerable argument. And yet what is there to recommend many of them beyond their jingle? Take our familiar friend:

Early to Bed and Early to Rise, Makes a Man Healthy, Wealthy and Wise.—Obviously, the main idea was to find a word to rhyme with "rise," and "wise" was the unfortunate word chosen. And now, trustful little boys are persuaded to go to bed at unreasonably early hours in the hope of becoming a sort of Sandow-Rothschild-Solomon, though we all know milkmen and market gardeners who get up at 5 a. m. and are neither rich nor clever, and members of parliament who go to bed late and are, if not clever, at least not poor and infirm. Since the invention of gas and electric light this ridiculous old proverb has outlived its original modicum of truth, and proves we must not venerate proverbs on account of their hoary antiquity.

The Early Bird Catches the Worm.—The mistake made here is that it assumes we are all birds. But some of us are worms. If we were not, what would become of the birds? And, therefore, while the birds do well to be early, let the worms be late—the later the better.

The Pitcher That Goes Oft to the Well Is Broken at Last.—Note, it does not say "is broken first," but "is broken at last." Of course every pitcher, whether it goes to the well or stays on the shelf, is broken at last, and the only result of this absurd proverb is to encourage lazy folk to do as little work as possible and unnecessarily keep out of harm's way.

If You Want a Thing Well Done, Do It Yourself.—There's shocking bad advice with which to start a youth on life's journey. If he wants a button well sewed on, he's to do it himself; if he wants his hair well cut, he's to cut it himself. He must mend his own chairs, shoe his own nag, darn his own socks. In short, from buying a horse to blacking his boots, he must do it himself. Poor fellow!

A Contented Mind Is a Continual Feast.—Can any one say what that means? Does it mean that the owner continually feasts on his contented mind or that the contented mind is continually feasting? Probably the latter, as we sometimes hear that "a hungry man's an angry man," and we all know that a satisfied appetite is the source of contentment. Hence it is not the contented mind which makes the feast, as the silly proverb implies, but the continual feast which produces the contented mind.

There's No Rule Without an Exception.—This is not only a proverb; it is also a rule. But obviously there is no exception to this rule, because if there were a rule with an exception this proverb would be untrue. But the proverb is a rule which has no exception, which, as Mr. Euclid would say, is absurd. Which was to be shown.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss, 'Tis Folly to Be Wise.—For oracular stupidity this proverb may be classed with the one about the pitcher. Granting it true, the difficulty is to know where ignorance is bliss and of course the proverb gives no assistance where it is most needed. Most people quote it as "ignorance is bliss," in their blissful ignorance, but if a proverb gives rise to error it is not only absurd; it is also dangerous. When people say—

A Little Learning Is a Dangerous Thing—They make that a reason not for learning more, but for learning less.

Love Me, Love My Dog.—If I go a-courting, and my ladylove bids me love her scented, dyspeptic poodle, which is not necessary to her health and comfort, must I not much more love her glass eye and false teeth and hair, which are? Yet common sense revolts at the notion, and I therefore assume that a proverb which, logically treated, makes such unreasonable demands on my affections is wrong and absurd.

Seeing Is Believing.—How can any reflecting person repeat these words? For very often we believe we see what really we do not. If a conjurer were to take this proverb as his motto, every one would see its absurdity. A straight stick half submerged in water looks crooked. Fortunately, another proverb says, "Trust not to appearances." And this brings us to the exquisite absurdity of popular proverbs which run in contradictory pairs and support both sides of an argument. Thus one proverb says, "Look before you leap;" another, "Who hesitates is lost." Sometimes we hear that "Second thoughts are best;" at other times that "Delays are dangerous." The desperate man relies on "Nothing venture, nothing have;" the cautious man on "Never venture out of your depth till you can swim." The impatient matrimonial candidate believes that "Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing;" the tardy one that one may "Marry in haste and repent at leisure." And so on ad infinitum. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—"Out of sight, out of mind," "It's never too late to mend"—"A fool at 40 will never be wise," "Too many cooks spoil the broth"—"There's safety in numbers" and "Two heads are better than one."

Therefore, let us examine our proverbial coinage before we pass it into the moral currency.

Change Wanted.

What some people need more than anything else is change—they have dollars, and they need sense.—Jewish Comment.

PEOPLE WHO GAMBLE.

Chinese and Italians Especially Addicted to Games of Chance.

Of all the nations of the earth who gamble—and they all do it more or less—the Chinese come in an easy first. Superstition and the gambling mania go in double harness, and while the mandarins fly kites to decide what should be done about Wei-Hai-Wei and Talien-Wan the humbler Celestials gamble for dear life to pass the time away. "The Chinese play night and day," says a traveler, "till they have lost all they are worth, and then they usually go and hang themselves," from which it would appear that the yellow danger is not so formidable after all.

The Chinese laborers in the United States squander their earnings in a game called "white pigeon's ticket." White, by the way, is the unlucky color for the gamer and the lucky one for the keeper of the gaming house. These gentry keep orange peel in a box, believing that it will bring them luck.

The Italians are no less superstitious, and they gamble persistently, the poor people especially, in the government lotteries. Everything has a number; a cat, a dog, a gondola, and the "Libro del Sogno"—the lotto player's oracle—will tell you what the number is and the rules for interpreting the appearances in dreams. Visitors to Venice, which has always been a stronghold of gambling, may have seen the declaration of the winning figures from the Campanile of St. Mark's—the silent, eager crowd gathered in the square and the group of officials gathered round the boy with the bandaged eyes who draws the numbers from the cage.

There is a story told in Venice of a madman who hailed a gondolier from the window of the madhouse on the island to tell him the numbers he had dreamed. The man put his money on them and won, and from that day to this the gondoliers go near the window as they pass in the hope that the madman will call again. The story is true.—London Chronicle.

VORACIOUS LITTLE ROBINS.

Each Required Fourteen Yards of Angleworms Every Day.

A would be philanthropist relates his experiences trying to play mother to a nest of little robins, which had by some accident been deprived of their rightful mother's care. He diligently set to work digging angleworms, and supposed that he was fulfilling his whole duty, when one of the poor little songsters died. Upon examination of the body, which was reduced to skin and bone, the foster parent came to the conclusion that it must have died of starvation.

Deeply grieved at his shortcoming, he redoubled his efforts, determined to at least save the other two. It was not long, however, before a second one died, evidently of the same malady. The good man then resolved that, whatever the third one died of, it should not be starvation, and took off his coat and went to work in earnest. He kept on with the angleworm diet until he found that his one little bird was consuming from 14 to 18 yards of angleworms a day. This was too much for his patience, and he proceeded to substitute the more easily managed diet of bread and milk and other delicacies, which were, however, not nearly so much to Miss Robin's taste.

Wanting to discover whether he had been catering to a family of abnormal appetites, our friend took to watching the methods of a real mother bird and found that she fed her young every two minutes. He then consulted the learned books upon birds and discovered that 14 yards of worms a day, with meals every two minutes, is the average rate of feeding fledgelings. He has therefore decided that he does not care to take up raising birds by hand as a business.—Boston Transcript.

He Got the Ad.

"You're not on that horrid paper, are you," cried the girl who speaks her mind, "though I did once meet a reporter from it who was rather nice? He came to see about getting an advertisement— What! Not a reporter? Why, I thought he was. Well, anyway I had lost a dog, and he said he had heard of it and wanted to know if I didn't want to advertise in his paper for it. I told him I didn't believe I liked his old paper, and he said he didn't think much of it himself, but he thought it was pretty apt to reach the class of people who stole dogs. And so since he was so polite about it I thought I might as well advertise in it. But I didn't get the dog."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Show Your Best Qualities.

Honesty does not require us to hang our oil paintings faced to the wall in order that our friends may see that they are made on coarse canvas. It is right to appear always at our best. Give the world your brightest thoughts, your most courteous speech, the outcome of your kindest impulses and purest motives, no matter if you are conscious that these things are above your ordinary level. God made the flowers show their colors, not their dull, fibrous matter; to load the air with their odors, not with the rankness of their sap.—Homiletic Review.

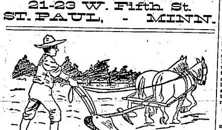
21-23 W. Fifth St. ST. PAUL, - MINN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

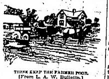
NATIONAL HIGHWAYS.

Government Should Aid in the Construction of Good Roads.

Hon. Martin Dodge of Ohio, chief of the bureau of road inquiry of the United States agricultural department, in his address before the Missouri Good Roads association said:

"The national, state and county governments should all assist in building roads. It would mean untold wealth to the rural districts. If agriculture were prospering at the present time, we would not be called upon the devise means for building good roads. They would be constructed as an investment."



THESE KEEP THE FARMER POOR.
[From L. A. W. Bulletin.]

The single effort of the national government to construct a highway from Cumberland, Md., to the west was defeated by the lack of co-operation among the people in the section which it was intended to traverse. Mr. Dodge said he hoped to see the return to the wisdom of the early statesman who planned this highway. Free delivery of mail and parcels post would be advantages that would come with this higher civilization. Then much of the necessity of hitching up and driving over five or ten miles would be avoided and the telephone could be used.

Chief Dodge called attention to the fact that no reduction had been made in the cost of hauling by animal power, although railroad and steamboat rates were much lower. The difficulties of the long haul have been overcome and high speed attained, but nothing has been done with the short haul. It costs 25 cents per ton per mile to move products over American country roads, a rate that prevails in old Mexico and about what it cost on the old Santa Fe trail. With good roads it would cost 5 cents a ton per mile at distances of over five miles.

ANCIENT ROAD LAWS.

Value of Wide Tires Was Known in the Last Century.

Although the wide tire agitation has usually been considered a matter of recent history, it is not generally known that New Jersey when yet a province of the English crown had upon her statute books a wide tire law, writes a Trenton correspondent of The L. A. W. Bulletin. One hundred and thirty-one years ago, in June, "An Act to regulate Carriages of Burden within this Colony" was passed. Thus read the preamble to this law of 1767:

"Whereas the Difference in the Track or Running of Waggons and Wheel Carriages of Burden in the several Counties of this Colony is found by Experience to be very inconvenient, and the Narrowness of the Fellies pressing or running on the Ground to be prejudicial and destructive to the Roads," it was enacted that all "Waggons or Carriages of Burden to be drawn by four or more Horses Oxen or other Cattle" made after May 1, 1768, traveling on the colony roads, and belonging to Jerseymen, "shall run or track on the Ground, from Center to Center, of the Fellies, no less than five Foot English Measure under the Penalty of Twenty Shillings." Regarding the broad tire it was further provided that all such wagons and carriages made after May 1, 1770, "shall have the Fellies or Part of the Wheels which press upon the Ground at least four Inches broad on the Surface" under like penalty.

A Machine Road Mender.

In spite of the constant advance in mechanical contrivances there are certain occupations which must still depend upon handiwork. Such we assume to be the business of picking up with the pickax the stones of a macadamized road before fresh metal could be laid and rolled upon it. But a machine called Rutty's patent macadam road scarifier may now be seen at work in London and possibly elsewhere tearing up the street roadway in the most satisfactory manner. It is of the nature of a plow, the plowshare being represented by thick spikes of chilled iron, which, set at an angle, tear up the roadway as the machine is dragged behind a steam roller.—Chambers' Journal.

Over the Hills.

A correspondent of the Bangor Commercial says: "Land in the rural districts of Maine is not so valuable that we should continue to travel the roads of our fathers over these rugged hills simply because they did. Discard these hill roads where it can be done and locate roads where they should be and where good roads can be made in a short time and easily kept in repair, and we should see a very decided change for the better."

Favors Trolley Lines.

Road Commissioner Budd of New Jersey is favorable to the trolley lines cutting through the country.

He thinks the farmers ought to meet the electric traction companies half way, and instead of holding cheap land at a very high price they should cheapen so that the trolley lines could secure their own right of way and leave the good roads for the use of the public under comfortable conditions.

Want Better Roads.

The cycling associations of Chicago, which have formed an alliance for securing better legislation, have practically decided to drop for the present the fight against the cycle baggage law and confine their efforts to a move for good roads.

OVERDIPLOMATIC.

Poor Old Meekton Gets Into Trouble Once More.

Mr. Meekton was gazing at his wife with that inane and amiable fixity which comes into a man's face when he has been napping and is ashamed of the fact.

"Leonidas!" she said sternly.

"What is it my dear?" he inquired as he straightened himself up in his sleepy hollow chair.

"What is the matter?"

"Nothing is the matter," he said, growing red in the face. "I haven't intimated that there was anything wrong, have I?"

"No. But you have been behaving rather queerly. Just now you gave a little start and exclaimed, 'Yes, Henrietta, I agree with you perfectly!'"

"Well," answered he apprehensively, "there isn't anything in that to take exception to, is there?"

"Are you sure you meant it?"

"Every word of it."

"You had given the matter due consideration before you spoke?"

"Certainly. Do you doubt me, Henrietta?"

"Oh, no! But I can't help attaching some significance to the fact that I hadn't uttered a word during the ten minutes previous to your enthusiastic indorsement of my sentiments."

"Well, to tell the truth, Henrietta, I had been asleep and something woke me, and I naturally supposed—that is to say, I took it for granted"— And then he gave it up.—Washington Star.

A Tough Proposition.

Patrick's face was so homely that it had been described as an "offinse to the landscape," and he was as poor as he was homely. One day a neighbor met him and said, "And how are ye, Pat?"

"Mighty bad," answered Pat. "It is shtarvation that is shtarin me in the face."

"Is that so?" said the sympathetic inquirer. "Sure, and it can't be very pleasant for ayther of ye."—New York World.

Pleasant For John.

Mrs. Murkle—John, you know I promised to get along without a tailor made suit if you would get me a sealskin coat last fall.

Mr. Murkle—Yes, dear, and it was a beauty that I got, wasn't it?

Mrs. Murkle—It was, indeed, love. Dear me! I shall have to get a terribly swell Easter outfit to keep folks from thinking we are slipping backward in money matters.—Chicago News.

Had No Interest In Saving It.

Hostess (at party)—Does your mother allow you to have two pieces of pie when you are at home, Willie?

Willie (who has asked for a second piece)—No, ma'am.

"Well, do you think she'd like you to have two pieces here?"

"Oh"—confidently—"she wouldn't care! This isn't her pie."—Buffalo News.

One of a Large Class.

Novice—Say, friend, can you tell me whether Slugger, the pugilist, is a heavyweight or a lightweight?

Old Sport—Neither. He's a paperweight.

Novice—Paperweight?

Old Sport—Yes; does all his scrapping in the papers.—Philadelphia Record.

A Fair Proposition.

Tom—So the heiress refused Jack?

Dick—Yes; it's too bad! He made a very fair proposition too.

Tom—What was it?

Dick—He promised to be a most devoted husband and offered to refund the money if he did not turn out exactly as represented.—Tit-Bits.

A NEW R. R.

To Be Built Across Northern Minnesota.

The passage in the legislature yesterday of an apparently innocent bill entitled "an act to provide for the incorporation of bridge companies," means a new railroad for Minnesota; and, what is more, one of the most important lines projected in recent years. The passage of the bill removed the last obstacle in the way of the projected line around the southern shore of the Lake of the Woods, connecting lines from Winnipeg and Port Arthur.

The new line is to be known as the Minnesota & Manitoba railroad, and will run from a point on the northern boundary of the state, just west of the Lake of the Woods, around the southern shore of the lake to a point on Rainy river, some miles east of the lake, forty miles in all; a short line and one in a remote country, apparently, but destined to become part of a system to compete with the great Canadian Pacific.

Engineers have already been over the Minnesota line and have decided that the best route will carry it between War Road river and Lake of the Woods to the mouth of the river, at which point there will be a townsite and a harbor, which will furnish a port on the Lake of the Woods for a vast territory along the western and southern shores of the lake. Another townsite will be established where the line is to cross Rainy river, which is navigable and will furnish another port for the territory along the river to the east and along the eastern shore and arms of the lake. The roads, therefore, will tap one of the richest territories in Canada, and will doubtless mean in the near future a line from the Lake of the Woods to Duluth, giving a great lake outlet much nearer than Port Arthur, and consequently the opening up of a large extent of Minnesota territory as yet untouched by any railroad.

There is no doubt that the line will be built at once. It will, in fact, be built this summer. The line from Winnipeg southeast to the Lake of the Woods is already largely graded, while the line from Port Arthur west, which will connect at Rainy river, is already operating 100 miles at the eastern end as far as Gunflint Lake.

The relation of the passage of the bill to the project is explained by the fact that the line will have to bridge Rainy river, and there was, until the passage of this law, no statute under which a bridge could be built and operated over an international boundary.—Crookston Times.

SUDDEN DEATH

Harry Pashley Died Suddenly Last Week.

The announcement of the death of Harry Pashley, which occured April 12, was a great surprise to the citizens of this place. Mr. Pashley was an unusually strong and hardy man, always enjoying the best of health and of a cheerful disposition. Death was caused by a combination of diseases, contracted by securing a severe cold and he was confined to his bed only four days. The funeral was held Sunday from the Methodist church on the East Side and was very largely attended.

The deceased was nearly 35 years of age and was born at Indianapolis, Ind. He had been a resident of this section for about 8 years, first settling on a farm north of here and later removing to this city. He was noted for his cheerful disposition and good habits, he being a sincere christian. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his demise.

The New Bank.

L. C. Simons and John A. Duffy are the movers in a new banking enterprise which is to be established in Red Lake Falls about the first of June as a state bank. Mr. Simons will be president, and Mr. Duffy cashier, with a board of directors composed of local business men. The move has been on foot for some time but the new bank was not a certainty until last week. A location has not yet been decided upon, but it will be, according to present indications, somewhere near the corner of Third and Main streets. Mr. Duffy, who has been station agent of the Northern Pacific here for the past twelve years, will shortly hand in his resignation. He is recognized as a shrewd financier. Mr. Simons, who is treasurer of the Red Lake Falls Milling Company, will continue in the position. Success to the new enterprise.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Methodist Ministers.

A district conference of Methodist ministers will be held at Crookston on May 8, 9 and 10. The meeting will be opened to the public and live topics of church work will be discussed by prominent pastors. Rev. Henry Logan, pastor of the church in this city, will read a paper on "Church Literature."

Send No Money.

Any reader of this paper can secure their choice of a Sterling Silver Bracelet, a good Watch or a Solid Gold Ring with a Genuine Diamond Setting, by distributing Flower Seed Coupons among their friends and acquaintances. Send your name and address with three 2c stamps to the American Seed Co., 335 Broadway, N. Y., to-day, and you will receive a package of choice seeds, $1.00 worth of Coupons, and full particulars.

Palaces on Wheels.

The Burlington's new Minneapolis and St. Paul-Chicago and St. Louis Train consists of, a buffet library car, a combination sleeping car, a standard sleeping car, a compartment sleeping car, a dining car, a reclining chair car, a day coach (high back seats.)

The most costly, beautiful, luxurious cars on earth. Steam heated; Electric lighted; Wide Vestibuled. No extra fares.

RIGHT OF WAY

The G. N. Has Begun Condemnation Proceedings.

For some years the G. N. Ry branch—the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. Co.—have held the right of way and station grounds in this city acquired by quit claim deed, which is now shown was given by a party who had no title to the land.

The land in question—lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, block 51, townsite of Thief River Falls—is owned by R. E. Winslow, of Minneapolis, and the contestants being unable to come to any satisfactory agreement as to the price of the land, the railway company has commenced condemnation proceedings to acquire the purchase of the land. Hearing of the petition for the appointment of a commission of three residents of Polk county to appraise its value, will be held before Judge Watts in Chambers at Crookstoon on April 24th.

Attorney F. A. Grady, of Red Lake Falls, appears for Mr. Winslow, while A. C. Wilkinson, of Crookston, represents the G. N.

The Keystone Farm.

At least one of the big bonanza farms in the valley will be kept as such and operated under one management, instead of suffering the fate of the greater number which have been divided up and sold in small lots, says the Grand Forks Herald. The exception to the rule is the famous Keystone farm west of Euclid. This farm was established many years ago by a few men who were heavily interested in the Standard Oil company, and who chose this method of investing a portion of their dividends. The farm comprised 18 sections of excellent land, from one headquarters until a few years ago. A change was brought about as a result of the death of one of the partners, whose heirs took as their share of the farm six sections, leaving twelve sections owned by the Keystone company.

These six sections have been held for sale for some time, and contrary to all precedents in such cases established, the Keystone company has become the purchaser, thus reuniting the 18 sections under one ownership. It would be difficult to find a better advertisement for northwestern lands than the fact that a company of shrewd capitalists such as the members of the Keystone firm are, should after years of experience make a purchase of this kind. The fact also speaks volumes for the management of our Scotch friend Wm. Davidson, who has been at the Keystone helm for years.

Ware Has Resigned.

Paul S. Ware, secretary of the corps of pine estimators, was in the city today enroute to Warren, where he has a business opening in sight. He and Chief Seelye are still in the employ of the government, together with a force of five of the estimators, who are watching the pine thieves. Secretary Ware has sent in his resignation, to take effect April 31st, and will again embark in the newspaper business.—Friday's Crookston Tribune.

A BAD POLICY

To Sell Stock in the Spring of the Year.

Several car loads of young stock—mostly one-year-old—was driven through this city last Thursday to Red Lake Falls where it was shipped to North Dakota. There the stock will be pastured during the summer and sold in the fall. It was all purchased of the farmers living north of here.

With hundreds of tons of grass going to waste in this section every year, it would seem that our farmers are persuing a very short-sighted policy in selling their cattle just at the profitable time of the year. It costs little or nothing to keep cattle here during the summer months, and the increase in their growth would pay nearly 50 per cent. As it is at present our farmers are giving to North Dakota parties the cream of the profits,

Fodder Corn.

Fodder corn is not nearly so well appreciated in the Red River valley as it should be. Farmers will grow into an appreciation of it as hay becomes more scarce, and as they learn what varieties to use and how to raise and feed it. Wheat yields better after a crop of corn kept clear of weeds than after summer fallow. One of the most inteligent farmers in the Red River valley lets his neighbors have land for corn free of charge, and even pays them a small sum for thus using the land, providing of course, that clean cultivation is practiced. The owner of the land reasons that he saves the cost of summer fallowing, and besides having the land in a better form than if fallow plowed once and cultivated twice.—Farm, Stock and Home.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The Minnesota state legislature adjourned Tuesday. The laws passed by this session will be presented to the readers of the News in a few weeks.

A. N. Dare, one of the best posted politicians in the state, has the following to say in his paper, the Elk River Star News: "There is no open opposition to Senator Nelson's re-election and everything looks smooth on the surface. But there is something in the air that tells me not to trust too implicitly to appearance. I have good reasons to suspect that there is already a move away down under the surface indicating trouble for the senator. You cannot find anything tangible to verify this suspicion, but sometimes one feels that something is going on without being able to give reasons for feeling so. I don't believe there will be any outspoken opposition to Senator Nelson until after the next legislature is elected, and not then unless the conditions are just right. If there is another candidate I predict he will come from Minneapolis."

Exchange Sayings.

It now looks as thought Capt. Van Sant would be enough of a candidate for governor to at least pile up a few cobble stones in the way of Sam Langum's candidacy for secretary of state.—Princeton Union.

* *

Notwithstanding the result of the campaign of 1898, Wm H. Eustis is said to be ambitious for a re-nomination and a "vindication." Be it said in all kindness to and respect for Mr. Eustis that his candidacy for re-nomination falls nothing short of an absolute absurdity. Minneapolis has twice in succession had the Republican candidate for governor, and upon both occasions he has lost the county by an overwhelming majority. Further argument is unnecessary, and no real friend of Mr. Eustis would encourage him to entertain the delusion that he is a gubernatorial possibility.—Princeton Union

* *

We are pained to see the light and thoughtless way in which Speaker Thomas B. Reed is flayed by the Republican press. Such attacks are the products of little souls, for surely the very essence of our government is the right of individual opinion. And if Thomas Brackett differs from his party on some minor points, or has balked some local appropriations in saving hundreds of millions to the taxpayers at a time when the burden was already great, he should be praised rather than condemned for his manly independence. Be not, therefore, hasty in your conclusions or severe in your denunciations of the big fellow from Maine. Such men are needed in every crisis, and though there may be good grounds for difference of opinion there are never any grounds for impudence of expression. The country is big enough and its glory great enough for us all.—Bede's Budget.

* *

The total debt of the United States at present, exclusive of certificates and treasury notes (the paper currency), is $1,425,776,234, of which amount $585,053,870 was caused by the civil war. The latest reports available place the total capitalization of railroads in the United States at $10,859,240,000. During the last fiscal year the government paid the railroads $50,444,201 for transporting the mails, and, exclusive of the extraordinary movement of troops incident to the war with Spain, the railroads received during the last year for transporting the troops $330,020.53, of which $227,765.87 was paid out of the treasury and $103,154.67 credited to bond-aided roads. The records have not been completed so as to show the entire cost of moving the troops by rail during the Spanish war. Nor is there any statement obtainable to show the amount of money paid by the governmet to telegraph companies for transmitting official messages. Each department, bureau and official has his own account, and pays for his own telegrams.—Chicago Record.

INCORPORATED

As the Thief River Falls Lumber Company.

The following concerning the new lumber company of this city, appeared in the Minneapolis Journal of Monday:

"Merrill, Wis., April 17.—There was incorporated at Madison, Wis., last Saturday the Thief River Falls Lumber company of Thief River Falls Minn., with a paid up capital stock of $200,000. The company consists of L. N. Anson, John Landers and John O'Day, of Merrill, Wis.; John Daly, of Grand Rapids, Wis.; Charles J. and D. N. Winton, of Wausau, Wis. The new company has bought the mill and all holdings of Pat and James Meehan at Thief River Falls, Minn., beside pine land holdings from other parties, so the company now has standing more than 200,000,000 feet of pine. A new sawmill with all modern equipments will be erected at Thief River Falls the coming ninety pays. The active head of the new company has not been chosen yet, but probably will be Charles J. Winton, of Wausau. The members of the new company are among the foremost lumbermen of the Wisconsin valley. L. N. Anson and John Landers are the president and vice-president, respectfully, of the Gilkey & Anson company, of Merrill; John O'Day and John Daly are among the largest loggers on the Wisconsin river, and Chas. J. and D. N. Winton are prominent lumbermen and capitalists of Wausau."

POLK WON

It Had too Strong a Lobby for Red Lake.

By a vote of 23 to 26 the bill which would divide the assets of old Polk county, giving Red Lake county its just share, was defeated in the senate Monday. Polk county had a very strong delegation in St. Paul and were assisted by the senators from all of the large counties in the state. Red Lake county was represented by County Commissioner Hanson, of this city, Marcus Johnson, Dr. Watson, C. E. Boughton, Theo. Gareau and other Red Lake Falls citizens.

Leased the Bridge.

The city on Tuesday leased of Chief Moosedung his bridge across the Thief River for a term of one year and passengers will not be required to pay 25 cents every time they cross. This will be a great benefit to the farmers living on the reservation east of here and will bring considerable trade to the city. A place for a dumping ground was also leased of the chief.

BREVITIES

PERSONALITIES.

Major General Otis is an alumnus of Rochester university, class of '58.

Charles de Lesseps has at last returned to Paris after years of exile due to his Panama troubles.

Chauncey Depew's first political speech was made for Fremont, the first "Republican" candidate for president.

Rev. James M. Taylor, the new president of Brown, is described as a man who added to his collegiate education a close study of business life.

Peter Warden, Alexander Beaubein and Charles H. Barnes are rival claimants to the distinction of being the first white child born in Chicago.

Senator Jones of Nevada has "struck it rich" in Costa Rica. He has been informed by his manager that a valuable lead has been found in his gold mines in that country.

President Tucker of Dartmouth says the best criticism of a sermon he ever received came from a discerning friend, who said, "You seem to be more concerned about the truth than about men."

Robert G. Reid, known as the "Czar of Newfoundland," who is spending the winter in Algiers, is improving in health, and his eyesight, which was injured in a mine explosion, is almost restored.

There are five old people in Madison county, Ind., whose ages aggregate 534 years. They are Alexander Ferguson, Mrs. Bettie Carrolton, Thomas Wells, Monroe Hodges and William Blackburn, aged respectively 107, 111, 106, 106 and 104 years.

James F. Warner, well known over all the northwest as a miner and promoter, is the original of Mark Twain's Colonel Mulberry Sellers. He has exploited mining schemes all over the world, but is just now interested in several Alaska ventures.

Captain Bob Evans says that Commodore Philip deserved the beautiful sword presented to him by his New York friends "not only because he is such a good chap generally, but because he prayed so loud with his 12 inch guns off Santiago July 3, 1898."

Alexander McDonald, who was penniless four years ago, but who is now known as "the Gold King of the Klondike" and is said to be worth $50,000,000 and perhaps $100,000,000, has married Miss Margaret Chisholm, daughter of the superintendent of the Thames water police of London.

General David A. Weisiger, who died in Richmond the other day, participated in all of the great battles in which the Army of Northern Virginia was engaged, and at the battle of the Wilderness, General Mahone having temporarily succeeded General Anderson, he took command of Mahone's brigade.

The friends of General Joe Wheeler say that he would eagerly welcome orders nudging him to duty in Manila. Should such luck befall him he would be accompanied to the east by his daughter, Miss Annie Early Wheeler, who won distinction as a nurse in Cuba the while her father added to his fame as a fighter.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

In Paris one person in 18 lives on charity.

One-half of the land in the city of Boston is unoccupied.

A company in London insures umbrellas. If you can prove that your umbrella has been stolen, the company pays you what it was worth.

An old woman of 75 died last summer in a little town in Dutchess county, N. Y. Her old mother survived her, and after the funeral she said sadly, "I always knew we'd never raise that girl."

A Ballville (O.) schoolteacher has been asked to resign because he punished his scholars by making them hold their noses in a small ring which he had drawn on the blackboard. The punishment came under the head of "cruel and unusual."

An old clock given to a Warren (Ills.) academy, to be used before the class in physics to demonstrate the laws of the pendulum, refused to run, and when the teacher got into its works he found a roll of bills, amounting to $242, clogging the machinery.

F. Campbell Bayard, the president of the Royal Meteorological society of London, said recently in a speech that statistics gathered by him showed that the United States weather bureau is the best organization of its kind in the world, and its predictions are the most accurate.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN.

Nothing angers a good woman quite so much as for the men to admire a flirt.

When a woman has a little daughter, she begins to live her girlish vanities over again.

Occasionally you discover that a woman you have never thought good looking thinks she is.

When a woman wants to be particularly effective, she speaks of a trifling incident as "a bright spot of color" in her life.

When a woman gets a brand of coffee that is not good, she sets it to one side to use in paying back when she borrows coffee from the neighbors.

When it comes to real prominence, no one can live on the same street with the woman who can say, "My affairs are in the hands of my lawyer."—Atchison Globe.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life; the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

GOOD ROADS CRANKS.

WHAT THE WHEELMEN HAVE DONE TO IMPROVE HIGHWAYS.

Farmers' National Congress Has Joined Forces With Bicyclers to Secure Better Roads—Will Pull Together For State Aid.

There is no public institution more potent in social, political and commercial well being than the public highway. There is nothing which, by its absence, its presence, its goodness or its badness, may so make or mar the community which uses it or would like to use it as the road by which its people may come together for the discussion of matters of public good or for that traffic in products which stamps man as the trading animal. Therefore the man who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before has his counterpart as a public benefactor in the person who puts down a good, solid, horse saving, wagon economizing roadbed where at first only rocks and mud or dust and sand held full sway. Roads, like people, are prone to wear into ruts, and many of the ruts in which the farmer's half laden wagon jolts are primarily caused by the ruts into which the farmer has jolted his representative in legislative assemblages. The farmer has always wanted good roads, but he knows that the farmer has always had to pay for them; consequently he has generally looked upon any movement in their direction as a raid upon his own pocket. It required, then, some new force to join hands and voice with him both in the demand and in the suggestion of ways and means.

This new force has arrived in the bicycler, says the Baltimore Sun. Banded under the banner of the League of American Wheelmen, the riders of the tireless tire have since their organization in 1880 raised the cry of "good roads," and have kept it up with wondrous energy. They have not only through their engineers devised or selected the best methods of making the cheapest durable thoroughfares, but they have conquered many obstacles that have stood between them and other groups of persons who are to be benefited equally with them in securing smooth roads, though these very groups hesitated to join the wheelmen's movement for fear it was selfish and was designed to saddle the costs upon them. The horsemen who drive fine road stock and the farmers have been the two classes which have required the warmest efforts of the "good roads cranks," as some of the wheelmen are called to wipe away suspicion. But the suspicion has now evaporated.

The farmers' national congress, which recently held its session at Fort Worth, Tex., has passed strong resolutions in favor of the wheelmen's way of getting good roads. It is known as the state aid system, and the adoption of these resolutions marks a signal success for the highway improvement committee of the League of American Wheelmen, and its chairman, Otto Dorner, who never suffered anything to chill his efforts to get next to the farmers with his project. For three successive years he has attended the farmers' congress of some 450 delegates, representing nearly every state in the Union, and now they see his idea clearly and like it. The state aid system, as shown in the resolutions, recites that the cost of construction of first class roads connecting farms with market towns is too considerable to be borne by farm property alone; that as the entire population is benefited directly and indirectly by good roads all property ought to contribute through the medium of a state tax. The Higbie-Armstrong law, by which state aid has been introduced in New York, is popular. It provides for a division of the cost of road construction among the state, the county, and the local township, and, it is said, many of the towns availing themselves of it will secure from outside sources four or five times the sum they raise themselves, while in the large cities, which will pay most of the funds, the tax will not fall more heavily than 1 cent per $1,000 of the assessed valuation. It is by making such calculations that the League of American Wheelmen has fought its way to the farmers' sympathy.

It is no wonder that the farmer feared the cycler at first. The man on wheels was at first looked upon as a dude in knee breeches out for an airing with his best girl, who demanded that others should, without cost to him, smooth the roads that he alone might have more pleasure. For years the farmer drove behind his horse with many a bumpety bump, and the horse became stalled without ever swearing about it or writing a long protest to the county paper. The coming of the bicycle marked an epoch. Here were people who could swear and write, pushing their vehicles by main strength on wretched paths when a street, even so rough as a Belgian block pavement makes it, permitted them to glide along almost without effort. Then the Wheelmen's league spent vast sums of money printing illustrated roadbooks, thousands of which have been distributed free of cost and other thousands barely at cost. In various quarters they have raised large sums to build cycle paths between sections of country on which the cyclers pass to and fro on business and pleasure. Money has been spent by them, as in Mr. Dorner's case, to be represented at conventions and to spread what they love to call the gospel of good roads, and now in Baltimore Chief Consul Sams of Maryland division, League of American Wheelmen, and Chairman Augusto Faure of the division committee on highways are holding out the hand of friendship to the horsemen and endeavoring to lay out a combined speedway and cycle path that shall be a local monument to the battle of good roads and serve as a model to be followed by visitors from every community who take a spin, a ride or a drive upon it.

The Gentle Government Mule.

"Yes," said the farmer who was trying to sell the old government mule, "he's as gentle as a spring mornin. I never knowed him to kick in my life. The only thing that's wrong with him is he's blind in one eye—on this side. An as fer gentleness, see—I kin ketch holt of his tail, an"—

He didn't finish the sentence, but when they were carrying him home on a stretcher he observed feebly and parenthetically:

"I mistook the side he wuz blind on. That's what I gits fer kindness in feedin a durned, ongrateful, onprincipled mule too high. Bill, take the broadax an hunt him up an kill him!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Character Reading.

Sophia, though very diffident, is a clever and intellectual girl. She is particularly fond of art and poetry. To those who do not understand her she may appear unnecessarily morose and serious.—Scraps.

Professional Ethics.

"Say," said the gentleman with the check shirt, plaid suit and thunderous diamonds, "if you will go in with me I've got a guy that we can work for a couple of thousand in a poker game, and you can have half."

"Sir!" replied the young lawyer. "This is a personal insult!"

"Excuse me," continued the wily tempter. "Of course I didn't mean this here as a personal affair. We will call it retaining you professionally."

"Er—how much did you say he had?"—Indianapolis Journal.

What He Wanted to Know.

"I say!" bellowed Chump to his grocer. "I bought some matches like these of you yesterday, and you said that they were safety ones."

"So they are, sir," said the grocer.

"Nonsense!" roared Chump. "I left a box of 'em in my dining room last night, and a burglar broke in and used 'em to find out where I kept my silver! What I want to know is, where's the 'safety' about the confounded things?"—Nuggets.

Her Fear.

At the end of the second act they were parting, perhaps forever.

"Kiss me!" he pleaded gently.

The young girl shrank away.

"I'm afraid I might wrench my back!" she faltered, for with a fiercely ambitious artist like her it must be Olga Nethersole or nothing.—Detroit Journal.

Tautology.

"Let me," said Civilization sweetly, "take you by the hand and lead you into the higher light."

"Beg pardon," said Barbarism shortly after. "That is not my hand. That is the scruff of my neck."

True, he was tautological, but what could be expected?—Indianapolis Journal.

And it's hard if you're ever caught napping,
For you're sure to wake up with a start and a squirm
As serenely he sets up his tapping.

And the more a weak victim may beg and implore
The more his tattoo he increases.
He is worse than the raven who tripped to the door
While Poe was composing his pieces.
And the cadence is spoiled for full many a song
By his bland and irrelevant rapping.
And brothers break step as they're marching along
Because of his heartless tap-tapping.

AFTER A HARD FIGHT

State Senate Amends and Passes the Omnibus Appropriation Bill.

BITTER CONTEST ON NORMALS

Duluth Finally Gets Its School and the Others Continuous Sessions.

ST. PAUL, April 14.—The omnibus appropriation bill has passed the senate. The main fight was made on the question of a normal school for Duluth and for continuous sessions at all the state normal schools. The provision for a Duluth school squeezed through by a narrow majority, 29 to 28. The appropriation for continuous sessions was first voted down, but the members interested made a hard fight and finally succeeded. On the final passage of the bill 23 members voted in the negative.

The finance committee killed 28 bills which had been hung up pending the drafting of the omnibus appropriation bill. Among them was the appropriation for the care and treatment of crippled and deformed children during the next two years.

The house amendments to the capitol bill were concurred in.

Senator Miller introduced a resolution directing the state railroad and warehouse commission to investigate into the reasonableness of freight rates on coal, lumber, wheat, corn, rye, barley, flax, oats and other grains.

No More Cash for Pops.

The senate refused to consider S. F. 378, the bill to allow the public examiner $800 per year additional for the salary of one of his deputies.

Under suspension of the rules H. F. 357, the Dwinnell bill giving bridge companies the same right as railroad and other companies to condemn property, was passed.

Senator Johnson presented a resolution limiting speeches in debate to five minutes, save by special permission, and providing that in no event should they be extended beyond ten minutes. It went over on notice of debate.

A bill for the appointment of a commission to adjust the claim of the Twin City Jockey club against the state for the building of the grand stand on the state fair grounds was presented by Senator McGill.

CUT OIL INSPECTION FEES.

House Thinks Seven Cents a Barrel Sufficient for the Work.

The house has recommended for passage the Bush bill reducing the fees to be collected by the oil inspector from 15 to 7 cents per barrel. The bill caused considerable debate but party lines were not closely drawn on the vote. The minority speakers, however, frequently reminded the Republicans that when the latter held the power and the office no action was taken to cut the fees.

The bill of Senator Potter, prohibiting the reinsurance by fire insurance companies in other than companies doing business in the state, was defeated.

The bill of Mr. Umland, making it a misdemeanor for the board of trustees or managers of any state institution to exceed the appropriation fixed by the legislature, was discussed at some length and finally referred to a special committee.

Spring Shooting Prohibited.

The house had the report from the special conference committee from the senate and house, appointed to consider the bill relating to the protection of game and fish. The committee recommended that the senate amendments be concurred in. These amendments included the cutting off of spring shooting of aquatic fowl.

Mr. Grondahl moved that this amendment be excepted from the report and that another conference be held with the senate committee in order to see if some agreement could not be reached. A call of the house was ordered on the motion, but this was lost, 29 to 64. The bill then passed by a vote of 83 ayes to 29 nays.

The bill of Mr. Laybourn, which provided for the distribution of the gross earnings taxes paid by railroads in the various counties of the state on the basis of the value of railroad property in each county, was laid to rest.

MONEY ABOUT GONE.

Legislative Expense Fund Will Just About Hold Out.

The original appropriation of $150,000 made at the opening of the session for legislative expenses will be very nearly exhausted when the legislature adjourns next week. Two years ago it cost the state $144,000 to run the legislature, and this year the figures will be very close to $150,000.

The members and employes of the legislature this year receive pay for 103 days. The members received $5 per day or $515 for the session. All the employes receive pay at the figure set by each house. They receive from $2.50 to $10, according to the position.

Northwestern Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 14.—The Northwestern Miller reports the flour output last week at Minneapolis as 263,190 barrels, against 271,510 the previous week, and 147,115 in 1898. At Superior and Duluth the output was 37,235 barrels, against 35,625 the week before. Flour was very dull last week. Sales were 180,000 barrels. Domestic buyers were bearish. Foreign trade was light, the few bids made being too low.

Charles Dudley Warner Improves.

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—The physicians attending Charles Dudley Warner announce his condition as much improved.

UP TO LIND AGAIN

House Bill for Asylums at Anoka and Hastings Passes the Senate.

OMNIBUS BILL IN CONFERENCE

House Refuses to Agree to the Changes Made in the Measure.

ST. PAUL, April 15.—The senate passed the Barker insane asylum bill, providing for hospitals at Anoka and Hastings, after slight opposition. An amendment by Senator Somerville to prevent the commitment of others than chronic insane was defeated—35 to 24. A somewhat similar amendment by Senator Knatvold was also voted down and the bill was then passed as received from the house by a vote of 30 to 18.

S. F. 470, the Thompson bill for the cottage or colony plan, was again laid on the table on motion of the author.

The Wheaton malicious mischief bill, which provided heavy penalties for riding another's bicycle or injuring it in any way, was indefinitely postponed on motion of Senator Horton. His five-sixths jury bill went the same way.

The Heimerdinger anti-blacklist bill was indefinitely postponed on motion of Senator Ryder, who said he thought it impracticable as drawn.

Want Young's Criticism Expunged.

Senator Sheehan, by permission of the governor, presented a concurrent resolution relating to the order of General Young reflecting upon the officers of the Fifteenth Minnesota and the refusal of the war department to afford the volunteer officers of the regiment an opportunity to vindicate themselves. The resolution requests that that portion of general orders No. 23 be expunged from the records of the war department.

Senator Stockwell's bill, providing for detention hospitals in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, was passed without any great opposition.

The Argetsinger school bill was passed after being amended to conform with the measure passed by the house. An amendment increasing the appropriation for graded schools from $200 to $300 was defeated.

Anti-Boycott Bill Fixed Up.

Senator Baldwin offered an amendment to the anti-boycott bill so that it would only prohibit the enforcement of a boycott by espionage pickets, circulars or advertisement, so as not to prohibit the determination of one or two people, or more, on their own part not to patronize a certain firm or firms. Senator Stockwell moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Senator Daugherty said the bill was a compromise between both sides and he was willing to fight it through. Senator Stockwell's motion was lost and the bill recommended to pass.

McGowan's bill to mark convict-made goods was indefinitely postponed.

The "inspection on the hoof" bill was again indefinitely postponed.

SENT TO CONFERENCE.

House Hesitates About Accepting Omnibus Bill Amendments.

The house disposed of the calendar of 18 bills at the afternoon session, 13 of the measures passing. On general orders, which contained 56 bills, 6 were advanced to the calendar and 4 indefinitely postponed.

The omnibus appropriation bill was returned to the house from the senate with additional appropriations amounting to $67,000 added to the figures as passed by the house.

Mr. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle insisted that the house not concur, and Mr. Yale of Winona moved as a substitute that the bill with the senate amendments be passed. Jacobson's motion was carried and Messrs. Jacobson, Yale and Wallace were appointed by the speaker as the conference committee.

Anti-Trust Bill Debated.

The anti-trust bill was before the house as a special order, but final action was deferred until a lengthy amendment by Mr. Dwinnell could be printed. The amendment is virtually a new bill. Mr. Dwinnell, in speaking on the measure, said the original bill was too sweeping. It involved any labor organization which formed a combination; it involved even dairy associations formed to maintain prices on butter and cream. In fact it involved a hundred useful domestic organizations formed to maintain prices. This, Mr. Dwinnel insisted, was far too radical, and said that that was one of the reasons the present anti-trust bill, which had been on the books since 1891, had never been enforced.

The house passed the bill by Mr. Bush, cutting down the fees for inspecting oil in tanks from 15 to 7 cents. The vote by which the bill was passed was 79 to 16.

Bills Passed in the House.

Appropriating $20,000 for the purpose of purchasing lands owned by private parties in the Itasca state park.

Allowing transfers of liquor licenses in case of death of holder or destruction of building by elements.

To prevent the sale of merchandise in bulk without notification to creditors.

Preventing the sale of adulterated baking powders.

Preventing the sale of adulterated white lead and mixed paints, unless so labeled.

Providing for actions against railroad companies to recover damage for loss on stock shipped.

Preventing the expenditure of more money by state institutions than is appropriated by the legislature for such institutions.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, April 17, 1899.

The last few days of the legislature have been a record breaker for the making up of issues, and of estimates of what has been done by the state's representatives, first for the general public good, and next for the general credit of the parties in power, respectively, the Republican majority, house and senate, and the Reform administration represented by Governor John Lind. It had not required the closing days to make up the general verdict that the aforetime inscription "Mene Mene Tekel Upharsin" was the only one to fit the case; but that all of a sudden, in the closing hours, events should at once make up the issues for next year, a full year in advance, was a complete surprise. To almost the last moment eminent Republicans expected that in some manner "this cup might pass," and the defeat of the gross earnings bill be prevented for party's sake. But it came, and under circumstances to overshadow all other legislation bearing in any manner on partisan success next year.

In former times when there has been more open throttling of the legislatures by the corporations, and when open disgraces were practiced, such as doling out to members and senators envelopes containing the pittances of cash each was to receive, and such as the deposit of money in the beds of legislators, as was practiced on the Duluth and Winnipeg land grant bill, it seemed that a storm would result the following year; still there was then some really important legislation accomplished, which in the end overshadowed the disgraces, and the result was that members and senators came back again as if nothing had happened. But then there was a Republican administration and machine to break the popular indignation. In the following party conventions the shortcomings were covered up with loud professions, and the advocates of true reforms, despairing at the mountain of Republican majority, in the main laid down and did nothing. Now, with a different administration, and the machine broken, the people take heart, and thus are ready to seize on the issues which the record presents.

At this time, while the final score is being made up, the gross earnings bill is the all engrossing topic, and never in the history of the state has there been such unanimous condemnation of the defeat of a state measure demanded by the people. This is shown by the state press. In attempting to collect these for presentation, the Bureau has simply been swamped. Our reform press without exception condemn the legislature, while a large per cent of the Republican press does likewise.

Foremost of the latter has been the Minneapolis Journal, in both its editorial and political news columns. When the bill was first placed in the hole in the senate, by a vote of more than a majority of the Republican senators, The Journal said editorially:

"We believe the bill to be fair and reasonable, and that even under an increase from 3 to 4 per cent, the railroads would still be favored regarding taxation as compared with other kinds of property, and we wonder what explanation the Republican majority in the senate is going to make the people of Minnesota for the position they have taken."

Previously, in its political news columns, the Journal has made the importance of passage of the legislation as emphatic as possible. When the final effort on the bill was about to be made, the Journal devoted a column to it editorially, saying in introduction:

"The reasonableness of the measure cannot be questioned, and is not. That many Republican members of the senate are conscious of the dangers which threaten the Republican party from the defeat of this bill is shown by the effort to enact in place of it a so-called anti-trust bill, which is relied upon to make political capital sufficient to counteract the manifest loss of public confidence through the defeat of the gross earnings bill."

Further, of the anti-trust bill trick, The Journal said:

"In the judgment of lawyers and business men, regardless of politics, the trust measure is a political bait thrown out to divert attention from the unaccountable failure on the part of the Republican senate to provide a reasonable railroad tax law, which in operation will bring into the state treasury in the neighborhood of $400,000 a year more than is now received from the railroad companies."

And The Journal said in conclusion:

"The Journal is thoroughly in sympathy with any proposition which will effectually protect the public from the ravages of monopoly, but it does not propose to stand idly by and see such a measure as the gross earnings bill covered up and concealed from the public view by what it believes to be such an inoperative and ineffective piece of buncombe as this so-called anti-trust bill."

To preserve the record, the following are the Republican senators responsible for the death of the bill:

Barker, Brower, Buckman, Chilton, Dickey, Daugherty, Greer, Hawkins, Horton, Hospes, Jepson, Jones, E. J., Jones J. D., McArthur, McCarthy, McKusick, Potter, Reeves, Roverud, Ryder, Sheehan, Shell, Sivright, Smith, E. E. Smith, J. H., Stockton, Underleak, Young.

Of these the following comprised the majority of the senate judiciary committee making the original report against the bill: Senators Young, Sheehan, Somerville, Shellbach, E. E. Smith, Greer, Horton, Benedict, J. D. Jones and Reeves.

Upon another day the Journal said, having referred to the application of the referendum, which principle the legislature had just slaughtered in a general bill:

"The Jacobson bill provided that the 4 per cent rate, before becoming operative, should be approved by the people at the 1900 general election. This is what the people want. They are willing to act, and then have the courts come in and decide the constitutional point raised by the opponents of the bill.

"The conclusion cannot be escaped that the senate, in defeating the Jacobson bill, has committed a very serious political blunder, and that the Republican party next year, as far as state matters are concerned, will find the way rough and steep as a result."

And thus, at the hands of the Journal, as well as by a large number of the Republican press of the state, is the issue made up. Never in the history of the state has a like situation been presented. And here it is well and fitting, for the present, to leave our friend, the enemy, alone with its dead.

Take up the Railroads' Burden,
For the peoples' cause is dead,
Who receive as an act of justice,
A stone when they ask for bread!
"From victory unto victory"
The Railroad song shall be,
Pile on the poor man's taxes
And let the Roads go free.

One of the further issues is the marked discrimination against agricultural interests. Special venom has been directed against the dairy and food department. The legislation asked for to enable it to in some degree keep up to the growth of the interests in its care called for some $3,500. The report of the retiring Republican commissioner called for $10,000 a year. It was also asked that the compensation of the head of the department, now on the basis of the deputies and assistants of other departments, be reasonably raised. The appropriations committee knocked out both, in the grab bag play of extending normal school outlays. The legislature, however, creates a third assistant for the Republican attorney general's office, with pay $200 more than that of the dairy and food commissioner. The dairy and food department has to do with more people than that of any other department under the appointment of the governor. Administration of the law comes high, hayseeds to do the drudgery come cheap. This will greatly gratify brother farmers and dairymen. The department inspects every grocery store in the state, and all dairy herds, or is required to by the law, and no money given it with which to do it. It has not a cent to employ counsel in enforcing the law, and none for adequate chemical work required by law. The issue is made very clear, and the responsibility for the future of poor results, wants to be understood. It is clear that the department is the victim of the pin-headed Republican politicians who fear that it will make too good a record for comparison with the former Republican administration.

The committee on appropriations, with whom this responsibility is to be placed, consisted of seventeen Republicans and two Democrats. The house chairman was Jacobson of Swift, but he was side-tracked by the influences which destroyed him during the session. Staples of Dakota became "it," as chairman of the joint house and senate committee. Mr. Staples had a brother in the employ of the dairy department, and took the pains to call on Commissioner Bowler and tender any assistance needed, volubly interested in the department. The brother retired, and since then "It" has been gruff and unconcerned. No brother, no appropriation.

Senator Knatvold of Freeborn has doubtless pleased his large dairy constituency by his course of discrimination against the department.

And East Grand Forks will probably hustle out the band, on the return of Senator "Jack" Ryder, they will be so proud of the record made by the successor of Hon. P. M. Ringdahl. Senator Jack has evoluted very rapidly since he was secretary of the Democratic state convention of 1896, and suffered defeat as labor champion in the hustings of Ramsey.

Let not the farmers in either community despair. When election time comes just stay at the threshing, as last year in the Red River valley, while the other fellows vote and send their man chosen for the corporation "threshings."

On all sides it is conceded that the best thing was done in the Hastings-Anoka matter. The state gets needed asylums, within reach of the Twin Cities, at far less outlay. This much from Governor Lind's veto.

And now we have it. It was railroads that the Republicans meant by Good Roads.

Hooray for the Sugar Bounty, Railroad Legislature of 1899. It will be noted, says the New Ulm News, for "having done many things that should not have been done, and left undone many things that should have been done."

The gross earnings proposition strikes the Kenyon Leader as being very deep. Not as "deep" as the railroad pocket.

And while Minnesota is so shaping up on issues, the national forces are getting right in line. And say, out here "Bryan and Harrison" pleases many for the ticket.

Will you please tell the friends that the exploiting of Van Wyck is useless in Minnesota! His name's Bryan.

EXPRESS COMPANY TAX

House and Senate Cannot Get Together on the Rate to Be Charged.

VINDICATION FOR SCHELLBACH

Attack of a Minneapolis Paper Made the Subject of a Resolution.

ST. PAUL, April 17.—The senate has refused to recede from its amendment to H. F. No. 23, to increase the gross earnings tax on express companies, by adopting the report of a majority of the senate conference committee, the same comprising the minority report of the joint conference committee. This report provided that the senate nonconcur in the action of the house in fixing the rate at 5 instead of 4½ per cent. The house meanwhile had adopted the report of its committee, which was also signed by Senator Miller, agreeing to reduce the rate from 6 per cent, as provided in the original bill, to 5 per cent. Another conference committee was appointed.

Schellbach Vindicated.

The senate spent a good part of the morning session in discussing an article in the Minneapolis Journal reflecting on the integrity of Senator Schellbach. A resolution by Senator McGill denouncing the article in question and declaring greatest confidence in the honesty and integrity of Senator Schellbach was unanimously adopted.

Senator McGowan of Hennepin called up early in the forenoon his resolution of Friday asking for an investigation as to insinuations which he thinks reflected on his character on account of his absence from the senate Tuesday and the effort of the senate to find him. Senator Snyder moved to lay on the table but the motion was lost by a vote of 17 to 28 and the resolution adopted.

An agreement was reached by the conferees on the omnibus bill, the senate agreeing to drop the appropriation for continuous sessions at the normal schools.

Passed Thirty-nine Bills.

The senate passed 39 bills, among them the following:

For the revision and codification of the laws of Minnesota, and for the amendation of the same.

To provide for the drainage and sale of swamp lands donated to the state by congress.

To transfer the assets belonging to the reform school fund to the general revenue fund of the state.

To provide for a suitable monument on the new capitol grounds to commemorate the battles of the Fourth Minnesota, etc., and appropriating money therefor.

To revise and codify the laws relating to building, loan and savings associations.

Empowering the common councils or other governing bodies of cities and villages to authorize for a term of years the construction and operation of street railway lines.

DISPOSED OF FORTY-TWO.

House Devotes Most of the Day to General Orders.

The house devoted much of the day to work on general orders and disposed of 42 of the 70 bills on the list. The Marin peddler license bill provoked considerable debate. As recommended to pass it provides for an optional township license of not more than $5.

The Fulton bill, creating a commission consisting of the attorney general and two justices of the supreme court, to inquire into and adjust the claim of the Twin City Jockey club for reimbursement for certain improvements on the fair grounds, was recommended to pass.

The drainage bill, appropriating $50,000 for improving swamp lands, was sent to the calendar after a hard fight by a vote of 41 to 34.

Anti-Trust Bill Passed.

It did not take the house long to dispose of the special order on the anti-trust bill. Mr. Foss thought the substitute bill inadmissable. He could not see why individuals should be excepted and allowed to do things which the corporations were forbidden to do. He feared it would be called class legislation. Mr. Dwinnell argued the merits of the bill briefly and the vote showed 79 for, none against.

The calendar of the house was cleared up before the noon recess. Two bills were defeated. One of them was the Roberts bill providing for a state board of electricians and the other was S. F. No. 288, amending the law relative to savings banks incorporated under the act of 1879.

Passed by the House.

Relating to private cemeteries and crematories.

To provide for primary elections.

Authorizing the purchase of one railroad by another.

Appropriating for the relief of Albert Swanson, et al., for damages sustained by reason of an illegal sale of school land in St. Louis county.

Providing for the appointment of assessors in villages where no assessor was elected under a previous act of the present legislature.

Providing that in cities of more than 10,000 and less than 50,000, water frontage tax may be charged for 10 years.

Chinese Rebelled.

HONG KONG, April 17.—The villagers of Tai Po Sun, one of the newly acquired places in the British territory on the Hong Kong mainland, rebelled and burned some British mat sheds. They are now armed and occupy the hills. Troops have been sent to quell the disturbance.

MEN

WHO OVERWORK.

It is hard for men of energy to keep their devotion to business within bounds. The spur of necessity or ambition disregards health. Overworked men are an easy mark for kidney troubles and all catarrhal diseases. The experience of Mr. J. Brake, Petrolea, Ont., Canada, is well told in his letter which follows:

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—"Four years ago I had a severe attack of Bright's disease, which brought me so low the doctor said nothing more could be done for me. When one of your lectures on the above disease was read to me I began to take Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin, and found it acted just as represented. In three months I was a well man, and have continued so ever since. Seeing the good effects on me, numbers of people of this town have called on me who were suffering from dyspepsia. They have taken your medicine with the best results."

Pe-ru-na is the scientific remedy for catarrh. Bright's disease is catarrh of the kidneys. Diarrhoea is catarrh of the bowels.

Write to the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O., for Dr. Hartman's free book on catarrh, in which these things are clearly explained.

Mr. A. W. Coale, manager Gem nickel mines, Hillside, Col., writes:

"I tried Pe-ru-na for catarrh. My hearing was almost gone in one ear, and one bottle of Pe-ru-na cured me."

GOOD ROADS CRANKS.

WHAT THE WHEELMEN HAVE DONE TO IMPROVE HIGHWAYS.

Farmers' National Congress Has Joined Forces With Bicyclers to Secure Better Roads—Will Pull Together For State Aid.

There is no public institution more potent in social, political and commercial well being than the public highway. There is nothing which, by its absence, its presence, its goodness or its badness, may so make or mar the community which uses it or would like to use it as the road by which its people may come together for the discussion of matters of public good or for that traffic in products which stamps man as the trading animal. Therefore the man who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before has his counterpart as a public benefactor in the person who puts down a good, solid, horse saving, wagon economizing roadbed where at first only rocks and mud or dust and sand held full sway. Roads, like people, are prone to wear into ruts, and many of the ruts in which the farmer's half laden wagon jolts are primarily caused by the ruts into which the farmer has jolted his representative in legislative assemblages. The farmer has always wanted good roads, but he knows that the farmer has always had to pay for them; consequently he has generally looked upon any movement in their direction as a raid upon his own pocket It required, then, some new force to join hands and voice with him both in the demand and in the suggestion of ways and means.

This new force has arrived in the bicycler, says the Baltimore Sun. Banded under the banner of the League of American Wheelmen, the riders of the tireless tire have since their organization in 1880 raised the cry of "good roads," and have kept it up with wondrous energy. They have not only through their engineers devised or selected the best methods of making the cheapest durable thoroughfares, but they have conquered many obstacles that have stood between them and other groups of persons who are to be benefited equally with them in securing smooth roads, though these very groups hesitated to join the wheelmen's movement for fear it was selfish and was designed to saddle the costs upon them. The horsemen who drive fine road stock and the farmers have been the two classes which have required the warmest efforts of the "good roads cranks," as some of the wheelmen are called to wipe away suspicion. But the suspicion has now evaporated.

The farmers' national congress, which recently held its session at Fort Worth, Tex., has passed strong resolutions in favor of the wheelmen's way of getting good roads. It is known as the state aid system, and the adoption of these resolutions marks a signal success for the highway improvement committee of the League of American Wheelmen, and its chairman, Otto Dorner, who never suffered anything to chill his efforts to get next to the farmers with his project. For three successive years he has attended the farmers' congress of some 450 delegates, representing nearly every state in the Union, and now they see his idea clearly and like it. The state aid system, as shown in the resolutions, recites that the cost of construction of first class roads connecting farms with market towns is too considerable to be borne by farm property alone; that as the entire population is benefited directly and indirectly by good roads all property ought to contribute through the medium of a state tax. He didn't finish the sentence, but when they were carrying him home on a stretcher he observed feebly and parenthetically:

"I mistook the side he was blind on. That's what I gits fer kindness in feedin a durned, ongrateful, onprincipled mule too high. Bill, take the broadax an hunt him up an kill him!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Professional Ethics.

"Say," said the gentleman with the check shirt, plaid suit and thunderous diamonds, "if you will go in with me I've got a guy that we can work for a couple of thousand in a poker game, and you can have half."

"Sir!" replied the young lawyer. "This is a personal insult!"

"Excuse me," continued the wily tempter. "Of course I didn't mean this here as a personal affair. We will call it retaining you professionally."

"Er—how much did you say he had?"—Indianapolis Journal.

What He Wanted to Know.

"I say!" bellowed Chump to his grocer. "I bought some matches like these of you yesterday, and you said that they were safety ones."

"So they are, sir," said the grocer.

"Nonsense!" roared Chump. "I left a box of 'em in my dining room last night, and a burglar broke in and used 'em to find out where I kept my silver! What I want to know is, where's the 'safety' about the confounded things?"—Nuggets.

At the end of the second act they were parting, perhaps forever.

AFTER A HARD FIGHT

State Senate Amends and Passes the Omnibus Appropriation Bill.

BITTER CONTEST ON NORMALS

Duluth Finally Gets Its School and the Others Continuous Sessions.

ST. PAUL, April 14.—The omnibus appropriation bill has passed the senate. The main fight was made on the question of a normal school for Duluth and for continuous sessions at all the state normal schools. The provision for a Duluth school squeezed through by a narrow majority, 29 to 28. The appropriation for continuous sessions was first voted down, but the members interested made a hard fight and finally succeeded. On the final passage of the bill 23 members voted in the negative.

The finance committee killed 28 bills which had been hung up pending the drafting of the omnibus appropriation bill. Among them was the appropriation for the care and treatment of crippled and deformed children during the next two years.

The house amendments to the capitol bill were concurred in.

Senator Miller introduced a resolution directing the state railroad and warehouse commission to investigate into the reasonableness of freight rates on coal, lumber, wheat, corn, rye, barley, flax, oats and other grains.

No More Cash for Pope.

The senate refused to consider S. F. 378, the bill to allow the public examiner $800 per year additional for the salary of one of his deputies.

Under suspension of the rules H. F. 357, the Dwinnell bill giving bridge companies the same right as railroad and other companies to condemn property, was passed.

Senator Johnson presented a resolution limiting speeches in debate to five minutes, save by special permission, and providing that in no event should they be extended beyond ten minutes. It went over on notice of debate.

A bill for the appointment of a commission to adjust the claim of the Twin City Jockey club against the state for the building of the grand stand on the state fair grounds was presented by Senator McGill.

CUT OIL INSPECTION FEES.

House Thinks Seven Cents a Barrel Sufficient for the Work.

The house has recommended for passage the Bush bill reducing the fees to be collected by the oil inspector from 15 to 7 cents per barrel. The bill caused considerable debate but party lines were not closely drawn on the vote. The minority speakers, however, frequently reminded the Republicans that when the latter held the power and the office no action was taken to cut the fees.

The bill of Senator Potter, prohibiting the reinsurance by fire insurance companies in other than companies doing business in the state, was defeated.

The bill of Mr. Umland, making it a misdemeanor for the board of trustees or managers of any state institution to exceed the appropriation fixed by the legislature, was discussed at some length and finally referred to a special committee.

Spring Shooting Prohibited.

The house had the report from the special conference committee from the senate and house, appointed to consider the bill relating to the protection of game and fish. The committee recommended that the senate amendments be concurred in. These amendments included the cutting off of spring shooting of aquatic fowl.

Mr. Grondahl moved that this amendment be excepted from the report and that another conference be held with the senate committee in order to see if some agreement could not be reached. A call of the house was ordered on the motion, but this was lost, 29 to 64. The bill then passed by a vote of 83 ayes to 23 nays.

The bill of Mr. Laybourn, which provided for the distribution of the gross earnings taxes paid by railroads in the various counties of the state on the basis of the value of railroad property in each county, was laid to rest.

MONEY ABOUT GONE.

Legislative Expense Fund Will Just About Hold Out.

The original appropriation of $150,000 made at the opening of the session for legislative expenses will be very nearly exhausted when the legislature adjourns next week. Two years ago it cost the state $144,000 to run the legislature, and this year the figures will be very close to $150,000.

The members and employes of the legislature this year receive pay for 103 days. The members received $5 per day or $515 for the session. All the employes receive pay at the figure set by each house. They receive from $2.50 to $10, according to the position.

Northwestern Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 14.—The Northwestern Miller reports the flour output last week at Minneapolis as 282,120 barrels, against 271,510 the previous week, and 147,115 in 1898. At Superior and Duluth the output was 37,235 barrels, against 35,625 the week before. Flour was very dull last week. Sales were 180,000 barrels. Domestic buyers were bearish. Foreign trade was light, the few bids made being too low.

Charles Dudley Warner Improves.

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—The physicians attending Charles Dudley Warner announce his condition as much improved.

UP TO LIND AGAIN

House Bill for Asylums at Anoka and Hastings Passes the Senate.

OMNIBUS BILL IN CONFERENCE

House Refuses to Agree to the Changes Made in the Measure.

ST. PAUL, April 15. — The senate passed the Barker insane asylum bill, providing for hospitals at Anoka and Hastings, after slight opposition. An amendment by Senator Somerville to prevent the commitment of others than chronic insane was defeated—35 to 24. A somewhat similar amendment by Senator Knatvold was also voted down and the bill was then passed as received from the house by a vote of 39 to 16.

S. F. 470, the Thompson bill for the cottage or colony plan, was again laid on the table on motion of the author.

The Wheaton malicious mischief bill, which provided heavy penalties for riding another's bicycle or injuring it in any way, was indefinitely postponed on motion of Senator Horton. His five-sixths jury bill went the same way.

The Heinerdinger anti-blacklist bill was indefinitely postponed on motion of Senator Ryder, who said he thought it impracticable as drawn.

Want Young's Criticism Expunged.

Senator Sheehan, by permission of the governor, presented a concurrent resolution relating to the order of General Young reflecting upon the officers of the Fifteenth Minnesota and the refusal of the war department, to afford the volunteer officers of the regiment an opportunity to vindicate themselves. The resolution requests that that portion of general orders No. 23 be expunged from the records of the war department.

Senator Stockwell's bill, providing for detention hospitals in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, was passed without any great opposition.

The Argetsinger school bill was passed after being amended to conform with the measure passed by the house. An amendment increasing the appropriation for graded schools from $200 to $300 was defeated.

Anti-Boycott Bill Fixed Up.

Senator Baldwin offered an amendment to the anti-boycott bill so that it would only prohibit the enforcement of a boycott by espionage pickets, circulars or advertisement, so as not to prohibit the determination of one or two people, or more, on their own part not to patronize a certain firm or firms. Senator Stockwell moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Senator Daugherty said the bill was a compromise between both sides and he was willing to fight it through. Senator Stockwell's motion was lost and the bill recommended to pass.

McGowan's bill to mark convict-made goods was indefinitely postponed.

The "inspection on the hoof" bill was again indefinitely postponed.

SENT TO CONFERENCE.

House Hesitates About Accepting Omnibus Bill Amendments.

The house disposed of the calendar of 13 bills at the afternoon session, 13 of the measures passing. On general orders, which contained 66 bills, 6 were advanced to the calendar and 4 indefinitely postponed.

The omnibus appropriation bill was returned to the house from the senate with additional appropriations amounting to $67,000 added to the figures as passed by the house.

Mr. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle insisted that the house not concur, and Mr. Yale of Winona moved as a substitute that the bill with the senate amendments be passed. Jacobson's motion was carried and Messrs. Jacobson, Yale and Wallace were appointed by the speaker as the conference committee.

Anti-Trust Bill Debated.

The anti-trust bill was before the house as a special order, but final action was deferred until a lengthy amendment by Mr. Dwinnell could be printed. The amendment is virtually a new bill. Mr. Dwinnell, in speaking on the measure, said the original bill was too sweeping. It involved any labor organization which formed a combination; it involved even dairy associations formed to maintain prices on butter and cream. In fact it involved a hundred useful domestic organizations formed to maintain prices. This, Mr. Dwinnel insisted, was far too radical, and said that that was one of the reasons the present anti-trust bill, which had been on the books since 1891, had never been enforced.

The house passed the bill by Mr. Bush, cutting down the fees for inspecting oil in tanks from 15 to 7 cents. The vote by which the bill was passed was 79 to 16.

Bills Passed in the House.

Appropriating $20,000 for the purpose of purchasing lands owned by private parties in the Itasca state park.

Allowing transfers of liquor licenses in case of death of holder or destruction of building by elements.

To prevent the sale of merchandise in bulk without notification to creditors.

Preventing the sale of adulterated baking powders.

Preventing the sale of adulterated white lead and mixed paints, unless so labeled.

Providing for actions against railroad companies to recover damage for loss on stock shipped.

Preventing the expenditure of more money by state institutions than is appropriated by the legislature for such institutions.

Reform Press Bureau.
ST. PAUL, April 17, 1899.

The last few days of the legislature have been a record breaker for the making up of issues, and of estimates of what has been done by the state's representatives, first for the general public good, and next for the general credit of the parties in power, respectively, the Republican majority, house and senate, and the Reform administration represented by Governor John Lind. It had not required the closing days to make up the general verdict that the aforetime inscription "Mene Mene Tekel Upharsin" was the only one to fit the case; but that all of a sudden, in the closing hours, events should at once make up the issues for next year, a full year in advance, was a complete surprise. To almost the last moment eminent Republicans expected that in some manner "this cup might pass," and the defeat of the gross earnings bill be prevented for party's sake. But it came, and under circumstances to overshadow all other legislation bearing in any manner on partisan success next year.

In former times when there has been more open throttling of the legislatures by the corporations, and when open disgraces were practiced, such as doling out to members and senators envelopes containing the pittances of cash each was to receive, and such as the deposit of money in the beds of legislators, as was practiced on the Duluth and Winnipeg land grant bill, it seemed that a storm would result the following year; still there was then some really important legislation accomplished, which in the end overshadowed the disgraces, and the result was that members and senators came back again as if nothing had happened. But then there was a Republican administration and machine to break the popular indignation. In the following party conventions the shortcomings were covered up with loud professions, and the advocates of true reforms, despairing at the mountain of Republican majority, in the main laid down and did nothing. Now, with a different administration, and the machine broken, the people take heart, and thus are ready to seize on the issues which the record presents.

At this time, while the final score is being made up, the gross earnings bill is the all engrossing topic, and never in the history of the state has there been such unanimous condemnation of the defeat of a state measure demanded by the people. This is shown by the state press. In attempting to collect those for presentation, the Bureau has simply been swamped. Our reform press without exception condemn the legislature, while a large per cent of the Republican press does likewise.

Foremost of the latter has been the Minneapolis Journal, in both its editorial and political news columns. When the bill was first placed in the hole in the senate, by a vote of more than a majority of the Republican senators, The Journal said editorially:

"We believe the bill to be fair and reasonable, and that even under an increase from 3 to 4 per cent, the railroads would still be favored regarding taxation as compared with other kinds of property, and we wonder what explanation the Republican majority in the senate is going to make the people of Minnesota for the position they have taken."

Previously, in its political news columns, the Journal has made the importance of passage of the legislation as emphatic as possible. When the final effort on the bill was about to be made, the Journal devoted a column to it editorially, saying in introduction:

"The reasonableness of the measure cannot be questioned, and is not. That many Republican members of the senate are conscious of the dangers which threaten the Republican party from the defeat of this bill is shown by the effort to enact in place of it a so-called anti-trust bill, which is relied upon to make political capital sufficient to counteract the manifest loss of public confidence through the defeat of the gross earnings bill."

Further, of the anti-trust bill trick, The Journal said:

"In the judgment of lawyers and business men, regardless of politics, the trust measure is a political bait thrown out to divert attention from the unaccountable failure on the part of the Republican senate to provide a reasonable railroad tax law, which in operation will bring into the state treasury in the neighborhood of $400,000 a year more than is now received from the railroad companies."

And The Journal said in conclusion:

"The Journal is thoroughly in sympathy with any proposition which will effectually protect the public from the ravages of monopoly, but it does not propose to stand idly by and see such a measure as the gross earnings bill covered up and concealed from the public view by what it believes to be such an inoperative and ineffective piece of buncombe as this so-called anti-trust bill."

To preserve the record, the following are the Republican senators responsible for the death of the bill:

Barker, Brower, Buckman, Chilton, Dickey, Daugherty, Greer, Hawkins, Horton, Hospes, Jepson, Jones, E. J., Jones J. D., McArthur, McCarthy, McKusick, Potter, Reeves, Roverud, Ryder, Sheehan, Shell, Sivright, Smith, E. E., Smith, J. H., Stockton, Underleak, Young.

Of those the following comprised the majority of the senate judiciary committee making the original report against the bill: Senators Young, Sheehan, Somerville, Shellbach, E. E. Smith, Greer, Horton, Benedict, J. D. Jones and Reeves.

Upon another day the Journal said, having referred to the application of the referendum, which principle the legislature had just slaughtered in a general bill:

"The Jacobson bill provided that the 4 per cent rate, before becoming operative, should be approved by the people at the 1900 general election. This is what the people want. They are willing to act, and then have the courts come in and decide the constitutional point raised by the opponents of the bill.

"The conclusion cannot be escaped that the senate, in defeating the Jacobson bill, has committed a very serious political blunder, and that the Republican party next year, as far as state matters are concerned, will find the way rough and steep as a result."

And thus, at the hands of the Journal, as well as by a large number of the Republican press of the state, is the issue made up. Never in the history of the state has a like situation been presented. And here it is well and fitting, for the present, to leave our friend, the enemy, alone with its dead.

Take up the Railroads' Burden,
For the peoples' cause is dead,
Who receive as an act of justice,
A stone when they ask for bread!
"From victory unto victory"
The Railroad song shall be,
Pile on the poor man's taxes
And let the Roads go free.

One of the further issues is the marked discrimination against agricultural interests. Special venom has been directed against the dairy and food department. The legislation asked for to enable it to in some degree keep up to the growth of the interests in its care called for some $3,500. The report of the retiring Republican commissioner called for $10,000 a year. It was also asked that the compensation of the head of the department, now on the basis of the deputies and assistants of other departments, be reasonably raised. The appropriations committee knocked out both, in the grab bag play of extending normal school outlays. The legislature, however, creates a third assistant for the Republican attorney general's office, with pay $200 more than that of the dairy and food commissioner. The dairy and food department has to do with more people than that of any other department under the appointment of the governor. Administration of the law comes high, hayseeds to do the drudgery come cheap. This will greatly gratify brother farmers and dairymen. The department inspects every grocery store in the state, and all dairy herds, or is required to by the law, and no money given it with which to do it. It has not a cent to employ counsel in enforcing the law, and none for adequate chemical work required by law. The issue is made very clear, and the responsibility for the future of poor results, wants to be understood. It is clear that the department is the victim of the pin-headed Republican politicians who fear that it will make too good a record for comparison with the former Republican administration.

The committee on appropriations, with whom this responsibility is to be placed, consisted of seventeen Republicans and two Democrats. The house chairman was Jacobson of Swift, but he was side-tracked by the influences which destroyed him during the session. Staples of Dakota became "it," as chairman of the joint house and senate committee. Mr. Staples had a brother in the employ of the dairy department, and took the pains to call on Commissioner Bowler and tender any assistance needed, volubly interested in the department. The brother retired, and since then "It" has been gruff and unconcerned. No brother, no appropriation.

Senator Knatvold of Freeborn has doubtless pleased his large dairy constituency by his course of discrimination against the department.

And East Grand Forks will probably hustle out the band, on the return of Senator "Jack" Ryder, they will be so proud of the record made by the successor of Hon. P. M. Ringdahl. Senator Jack has evoluted very rapidly since he was secretary of the Democratic state convention of 1896, and suffered defeat as labor champion in the hustings of Ramsey.

Let not the farmers in either community despair. When election time comes just stay at the threshing, as last year in the Red River valley, while the other fellows vote and send their man chosen for the corporation "threshings."

On all sides it is conceded that the best thing was done in the Hastings-Anoka matter. The state gets needed asylums, within reach of the Twin Cities, at far less outlay. This much from Governor Lind's veto.

And now we have it. It was railroads that the Republicans meant by Good Roads.

Hooray for the Sugar Bounty, Railroad Legislature of 1899. It will be noted, says the New Ulm News, for "having done many things that should not have been done, and left undone many things that should have been done."

The gross earnings proposition strikes the Kenyon Leader as being very deep. Not as "deep" as the railroad pocket.

And while Minnesota is so shaping up on issues, the national forces are getting right in line. And say, out here "Bryan and Harrison" pleases many for the ticket.

Will you please tell the friends that the exploiting of Van Wyck is useless in Minnesota! His name's Bryan.

EXPRESS COMPANY TAX

House and Senate Cannot Get Together on the Rate to Be Charged.

VINDICATION FOR SCHELLBACH

Attack of a Minneapolis Paper Made the Subject of a Resolution.

ST. PAUL, April 17.—The senate has refused to recede from its amendment to H. F. No. 23, to increase the gross earnings tax on express companies, by adopting the report of a majority of the senate conference committee, the same comprising the minority report of the joint conference committee. This report provided that the senate nonconcur in the action of the house in fixing the rate at 5 instead of 4½ per cent. The house meanwhile had adopted the report of its committee, which was also signed by Senator Miller, agreeing to reduce the rate from 6 per cent, as provided in the original bill, to 5 per cent. Another conference committee was appointed.

Schellbach Vindicated.

The senate spent a good part of the morning session in discussing an article in the Minneapolis Journal reflecting on the integrity of Senator Schellbach. A resolution by Senator McGill denouncing the article in question and declaring greatest confidence in the honesty and integrity of Senator Schellbach was unanimously adopted.

Senator McGowan of Hennepin called up early in the forenoon his resolution of Friday asking for an investigation as to insinuations which he thinks reflected on his character on account of his absence from the senate Tuesday and the effort of the senate to find him. Senator Snyder moved to lay on the table but the motion was lost by a vote of 17 to 28 and the resolution adopted.

An agreement was reached by the conferees on the omnibus bill, the senate agreeing to drop the appropriation for continuous sessions at the normal schools.

Passed Thirty-nine Bills.

The senate passed 39 bills, among them the following:

For the revision and codification of the laws of Minnesota, and for the amendation of the same.

To provide for the drainage and sale of swamp lands donated to the state by congress.

To transfer the assets belonging to the reform school fund to the general revenue fund of the state.

To provide for a suitable monument on the new capitol grounds to commemorate the battles of the Fourth Minnesota, etc., and appropriating money therefor.

To revise and codify the laws relating to building, loan and savings associations.

Empowering the common councils or other governing bodies of cities and villages to authorize for a term of years the construction and operation of street railway lines.

DISPOSED OF FORTY-TWO.

House Devotes Most of the Day to General Orders.

The house devoted much of the day to work on general orders and disposed of 42 of the 70 bills on the list. The Marin peddler license bill provoked considerable debate. As recommended to pass it provides for an optional township license of not more than $5.

The Fulton bill, creating a commission consisting of the attorney general and two justices of the supreme court, to inquire into and adjust the claim of the Twin City Jockey club for reimbursement for certain improvements on the fair grounds, was recommended to pass.

The drainage bill, appropriating $50,000 for improving swamp lands, was sent to the calendar after a hard fight by a vote of 41 to 34.

Anti-Trust Bill Passed.

It did not take the house long to dispose of the special order on the anti-trust bill. Mr. Foss thought the substitute bill inadmissable. He could not see why individuals should be excepted and allowed to do things which the corporations were forbidden to do. He feared it would be called class legislation. Mr. Dwinnell argued the merits of the bill briefly and the vote showed 70 for, none against.

The calendar of the house was cleared up before the noon recess. Two bills were defeated. One of them was the Roberts bill providing for a state board of electricians and the other was S. F. No. 288, amending the law relative to savings banks incorporated under the act of 1879.

Passed by the House.

Relating to private cemeteries and crematories.

To provide for primary elections.

Authorizing the purchase of one railroad by another.

Appropriating for the relief of Albert Swanson, et al., for damages sustained by reason of an illegal sale of school land in St. Louis county.

Providing for the appointment of assessors in villages where no assessor was elected under a previous act of the present legislature.

Providing that in cities of more than 10,000 and less than 50,000, water frontage tax may be charged for 10 years.

Chinese Rebelled.

HONG KONG, April 17.—The villagers of Taih Po Sun, one of the newly acquired places in the British territory on the Hong Kong mainland, rebelled and burned some British mat sheds. They are now armed and occupy the hills. Troops have been sent to quell the disturbance.

MEN

WHO OVERWORK.

It is hard for men of energy to keep their devotion to business within bounds. The spur of necessity or ambition disregards health. Overworked men are an easy mark for kidney troubles and all catarrhal diseases. The experience of Mr. J. Brake, Petrolea, Ont., Canada, is well told in his letter which follows:

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—"Four years ago I had a severe attack of Bright's disease, which brought me so low the doctor said nothing more could be done for me. When one of your lectures on the above disease was read to me I began to take Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin, and found it acted just as represented. In three months I was a well man, and have continued so ever since. Seeing the good effects on me, numbers of people of this town have called on me who were suffering from dyspepsia. They have taken your medicine with the best results."

Pe-ru-na is the scientific remedy for catarrh. Bright's disease is catarrh of the kidneys. Diarrhœa is catarrh of the bowels.

Write to the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O., for Dr. Hartman's free book on catarrh, in which these things are clearly explained.

Mr. A. W. Coale, manager Gem nickel mines, Hillside, Col., writes:

"I tried Pe-ru-na for catarrh. My hearing was almost gone in one ear, and one bottle of Pe-ru-na cured me."

BLOCK BURNED

Great Milinery Establishment at Cleveland Destroyed by Fire.

First Reports of Loss of Life Not Correct, but Several Were Injured.

Building Was Filled With Employes and Many Had Narrow Escapes.

Almshouse in New Brunswick Burns and Four of the Inmates Perish.

CLEVELAND, April 17.—The immense wholesale millinery establishment of Hart & Co., occupying the block from Bank to Academy street, has been destroyed by fire. Ambulances were called, and it was reported that a number of lives had been lost. Later it was said by the firemen that no lives had been lost but several are known to have been injured. The flames spread rapidly and 20 engines, a water tower and two fire boats threw water into the burning buildings. The fire originated in the 4-story brick building occupied by Comey & Johnson, hat manufacturers, and spread with great rapidity through the structure and to the adjoining brick block owned by Hart & Co., wholesale milliners, and several other firms. The loss so far is roughly estimated at $500,000. Both buildings were crowded with hundreds of girls. Many of them were carried down the fire escapes by the firemen.

About a dozen men, cut off from escape in the Hart building, ran to the roof and began crying for assistance. The crowd below looked on horror-stricken begging the unfortunates not to jump. Ladders were run up as fast as possible and all on the roof were soon brought safely to the ground.

In two and a half hours the fire was brought under control. The total loss is estimated at from $600,000 to $700,000; partially covered by insurance.

About a dozen were injured.

Locating Gold Claims in Cuba.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, April 17.—Colorado prospectors have located six gold claims near Holguin, this province. One claim which is very rich was found in some old Indian workings. Several large parties have started for the gold district. The discovery of two copper mines in the El Cobre district is announced.

STRUCK BY AN AVALANCHE.

Four Men Injured, Three Probably Fatally, on the Great Northern.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 17.—A Post Intelligencer special from Wellington says: While a rotary snowplow was clearing the Great Northern track this side of Madison it was struck by an avalanche and dashed 1,000 feet down a canyon. There were seven men on the engine in addition to the rotary crew. All have been dug out of the snow but one. Four men were injured, three probably fatally.

FOUR PERISHED.

Fatal Fire in the Northumberland, N. B., Almshouse.

CHATHAM, N. B., April 17.—Four people were burned to death in a fire at the Northumberland county almshouse. The institution was destroyed with a loss of $10,000. The dead are: Thomas Blank, John McIntyre, Henry Hobbs and Owen McLean.

Thirty-six Drowned.

VICTORIA, April 17.—The Glenogle, which has arrived from the Orient, brings news of a collision between the steamers Hokushin Maru and Kitami Maru, off Ofuyu cape, in the province of Teshio Hokkaido, on the 30th ult. The Hokushin sunk a minute after she was struck, and all on board, 36 persons, were drowned. The other vessel made for shore and succeeded in getting into the shallow, where she stranded.

Indians Reported Drowned.

SHERIDAN, Wy., April 17.—Floods caused by melting snow in the mountains delayed traffic temporarily and did considerable damage in this city. Five small bridges were washed away and the main supply pipe of the waterworks was broken. Several Indians on the Crow reservation are reported to have been drowned.

INVITED M'KINLEY.

President's Presence at the G. A. R. Encampment Desired.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Commander-in-Chief W. C. Johnson of the G. A. R., has extended an invitation to President McKinley to attend the national encampment of the organization to begin at Philadelphia, on Sept. 4. Commander Johnson was accompanied by Captain E. R. Monfort of Cincinnati, Captain W. H. Armstrong of Indianapolis, and Captain George H. Patrick of Montgomery, Ala. The president said that if he was in Washington at the time, he would attend the encampment. It is possible that the president will be in the West. His intention now is to make his Western trip in July or August.

PLATT IS BAD

Croker Says His Firm Is at the Bottom of All New York Crookedness

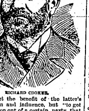
And Demands That the Investigation Commission Hunt Them Down.

All the Corporations in the State Virtually Run by That Firm.

If Crookedness Is Found in New York City Croker Will Help Abolish It.

NEW YORK, April 17.—Mr. Meyer, the partner of Richard Croker, was the first witness of importance in the Mazet investigation.

Mr. Meyer replied to questions regarding his real estate auction business but imparted no information regarding his judicial sales additional to what was already brought out. He did not, he said, take Mr. Croker into partnership to get the benefit of the latter's reputation and influence, but "to get satisfaction out of a certain party that I had a little grudge against."



RICHARD CROKER.

Mr. Meyer admitted that Mr. Croker had him "appointed" to the dock board but corrected himself by saying he was appointed by Mayor Van Wyck.

He had bought stock of the Consolidated Ice company, while a member of the dock board, but refused to go into details regarding that transaction on the ground that it was his private business. There were several sharp passages between Mr. Moss and Mr. Meyer.

Would Forfeit Liberty and Fortune.

Mr. Meyer was excused and Mr. Croker was called to the witness stand.

Mr. Moss recalled the assertion made Mr. Croker that if it should be proven that he had ever received any dishonest money from the city, he would allow his right arm to be cut off.

"Are you willing to make the proposition that if dishonorable money or dishonorable transactions are laid at your door, you will part with your fortune and part with your liberty?" asked Mr. Moss.

"Yes," said Mr. Croker.

"That is more to the point and more to the purpose," replied Mr. Moss.

Mr. Croker declined to talk regarding his financial circumstances, when he returned from Europe in 1897. It was, he said, his personal affairs. The same reason was given for refusing to answer the question if he had given his son Frank $17,000 to go into the Roebling Construction company.

"While my son has been in the Roebling company," Mr. Croker added, "it has never received a contract from the city; so that it does not concern this committee at all."

Platt's Firm the Root of Evil.

"Go on and examine Mr. Platt's firm," Mr. Croker said, hotly, "and find out what his boys are in, if you want to be honest. You go and examine the people who brought you here to examine us. That is the gentleman—Mr. Platt—who puts you here to examine us. You go and examine his firm. They are at the foundation of all the corruption in this city. I say that there is more corruption in that firm than anywhere else. You go and examine that firm, now, to be fair, and bring their books here."

Mr. Moss said the matter Mr. Croker had spoken of was in no way concerned with the local government.

"You make that matter in any way pertinent to this inquiry and I will examine into it," said the lawyer.

Mr. Croker continued to declaim against the Platt influence and the Platt firm, which latter, he said, was to pay Mr. Moss his fee.

Continuing he said: "Mr. Platt's firm are taking all the corporations by retainer. They could not get the city departments, the people would not give that to them. The people put us in charge of the city departments and we are responsible to the people for them. You find one city department or any one in the city department, who is doing wrong and tell me and I will be one of the first people to help to get them out."

Mr. Croker said he was not afraid of convicting himself or incriminating himself, but thought there was no law or reason for Mr. Moss to come down here and examine into his private affairs.

Mr. Croker said there were no state senators present at the Tammany club dinner on Thursday night, because their place was in Albany at their business.

"And you told them so, did you not?" asked Mr. Moss.

"Yes," said the witness.

"And they obeyed you?" queried the lawyer.

"I think they did," said Mr. Croker.

Mrs. Amanda Robinson, near Howesville, Clay County, Ind., says:
"I was afflicted with troubles incident to my sex and in very delicate health. Lost appetite, flesh, and was greatly depressed. After taking various remedies without benefit, I was induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. In the summer of 1897 I procured five boxes and began taking the pills as directed. Before consuming the second box I could very perceptibly feel their beneficial effects. Appetite returned, complexion improved, and I had renewed strength. After taking the five boxes I felt better in every way; I was able to do my usual daily work and I stopped taking the pills."

John R. McKinnon,
MAIN STREET
NEAR MERCHANTS BANK

IT IS EVIDENCE

Judge Biddle Formally Admits the Red Book in the Quay Case.

This Action Taken Upon the Testimony of Expert Goldsmith

That It Was One of the Books of the Bank—The Black Book

And the Blue Book Kept by Cashier Hopkins Were Also Admitted.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17.—After an argument at some length by the opposing attorneys in the Quay case, Judge Biddle formally admitted the now famous "red book" as evidence. Later he also admitted the "blue book" and the "black book." Judge Biddle, in admitting the "red book" said:

"When the question originally arose in this case in reference to this particular book, I did not think the district attorney had sufficiently established the proof that it was a bank book. The question now comes in an entirely different capacity. It seems to me that an expert could tell, better than anyone else, what books are necessary to carry out the system in vogue at that bank. He swore most positively that this book is a book of the bank. Up to a certain date he said the books were kept in a certain way, and the accounts compared in the ledger. He followed this up with the statement that entries formerly made in the ledger were now in this book.

"The gentleman who kept this book was cashier and to use the words of the assitant cashier, 'he was the whole bank.' The question is not whether the contents of this book are material or immaterial, but whether it is a book of the bank. The expert positively swears it is a book of the bank, and under those circumstances, it is admitted, as he knows more about it than I do."

Caused a General Buzz.

During the announcement of the decision the most complete silence prevailed in the courtroom, and as the court finished, a general buzz of whispering was noticeable, and every eye was turned in the direction of Mr. Quay. He sat quietly, and there was not a movement of a muscle to indicate what impression the decision had made upon him. A little later, a smile came over his face. After the decision, Mr. Watson made an effort, apparently, to change the court's decision by calling attention to the fact that the judge stated that prior to 1891, before the existence of the red book, the entries of interest payments on state moneys were made direct in the ledger, whereas there had been no testimony to that effect. The judge stated stated that he so understood.

The district attorney contended that he had said the red book indicated a new system to avoid discovery of iniquitious transactions rendered absolutely necessary after 1891 by the new banking law. Mr. Watson replied that the red book did not show regular calculation of interest, but only three specific instances.

Judge Biddle disposed of the matter by saying, in brief, that the books would speak for themselves.

Blue Book and Black Book.

Mr. Goldsmith was recalled to testify that the "black book" found in Hopkins' desk, is a book of the bank. This book, the commonwealth alleges, shows transactions involving the purchase and sales of stock in which the defendant was interested. The same objections which were made to this witnesses' testimony in the case of the "red book" were again made by the defense and the objections were overruled.

"In your opinion, is this a book of the bank?" asked the district attorney.

"Yes, sir, it is a book of the bank."

This was the only question by the prosecution and Mr. Shields cross examined the witness.

Mr. Goldsmith said that his opinion was based upon the fact that the book explains the nature of a number of loans made by the bank, not explained by the regular books. These transactions, he said, dealt with persons who were customers of the bank, a number who were borrowers from the bank, on the stocks mentioned in the book, and some were against strangers. It was disclosed by the witness what the contents of the book are.

The book was formally offered in evidence, and the same formal objections made in the case of the "red book" were made and overruled. The "blue book" was next testified to, and was admitted, against the same objections as to the other two books. This book, which was also found in the cashier's desk, is also a record of individual loans, and shows that the cashier made loans to Senator Quay.

Six Day Races Prohibited.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 17—Governor Roosevelt has signed the bill of Assemblyman Collins prohibiting six day bicycle and other races. The provisions of the bill are: "In a bicycle race or other contest of skill, speed or endurance, wherein one or more persons shall be a contestant or contestants, it shall be unlawful for any contestant to continue in such race or contest for a longer time than 12 hours during any 24 hours."

WERE AMBUSHED.

North Dakotans Caught in a Trap and Five Killed and Two Wounded.

MANILA, April 17.—General Lawton is marching north along the roads between the hills and the lake, with the gunboats Napidan and Laguna de Bay abreast of his troops. The enemy is retreating northward.

On Wednesday the troops crossed the Pagbanjan and concentrated at Lambun, at the mouth of the river. After leaving two companies of the Fourteenth regiment to guard the entrance of the river, the troops marched to Longas and found it deserted.

Major Weisenberger's sharpshooters were sent towards Pactos Ancontenca in the afternoon. They ran upon a nest of rebels in some thick bushes, which afforded a splendid cover. Five men of the North Dakota regiment were killed and two wounded, two of the former dying after having been brought to Longas church, where Father McKinnon administered the sacrament to them. The main body of the American troops, while at dinner in Longas, heard the firing and advanced to the Support of the Sharpshooters.

The Laguna de Bay, at the beginning of the fight, shelled the hills, making them too hot for the enemy.

The Americans entered San Antonio at sunset without meeting with any resistance. Twenty unarmed prisoners, bearing copies of the United States Philippine commission proclamation, which they had somehow secured, were afterwards released and sent outside our lines with bundles of the proclamation to distribute.

The Fourth cavalry is guarding Santa Cruz. Two companies of the Fourteenth regiment are at the mouth of the river, two are at Pasig and two at Lambun, and one of the Fourteenth regiment and four of the North Dakota regiment are at San Antonio. The remainder of the troops are at Longas. General Lawton is on board the Laguna de Bay.

The country just occupied is thickly populated and produces much fruit.

Americans Capture Pansanghan.

Starting in an easterly direction along the road to Pansanghan a party of 60 sharpshooters, under Lieutenant Southern of the Washington regiment, came upon a trench across the road about a mile out of Santa Cruz. Lieutenant Southern was wounded. The Americans then advanced with the mounted guns and the Fourteenth infantry battalion in the center, Lick's battalion of the First Idaho infantry on the right and Raines' battalion of the First North Dakota on the left. The trench was carried without loss to the Americans. Pansanghan was found deserted.

One Filipino was killed and five wounded in the encounter beyond Toangas. Eight men of the North Dakota regiment, moving in single file through the woods, received a volley from a clump of bushes not far away. Only one got off unhurt. He dragged off a comrade with four bullets in his body to the main force and then led the main body of troops back to the scene of the ambush.

WILL BUILD THIS SEASON.

Northern Pacific Official Tells of Several Proposed Extensions.

NEW YORK, April 17.—The Wall Street Journal, upon the authority of "a high Northern Pacific official," publishes a statement in regard to that road in part as follows:

"It is believed that we will eventually settle the Clearwater affair. If it is not settled by the time our line is completed east of Lewiston we will certainly build west of Lewiston. We expect to have the entire extension for the new crop.

"Other branches or extensions authorized on which work begins immediately are the Jamestown branch, 15 miles from Carrington, N. D., which will be extended 15 miles further; also the Cooperstown extension northwesterly, 27 miles, both into a fine agricultural country that is not now served, and the Seattle-Palmer cut off. They will be completed this season."

Son of General Meyer.

CLEVELAND, April 17.—Lieutenant Ralph Meyer was the son of General E. R. Meyer, who served with distinction in the Civil war, and who is a prominent attorney of this city. Young Meyer was 21 years old. The Meyer family is one of fighters. Lieutenant Ralph Meyer has a brother who was wounded at Santiago, and for a time his life was despaired of.

Townsend Goes to Belgium.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The president has appointed Lawrence Townsend of Pennsylvania to succeed Mr. Bellamy Storer as United States minister to Brussels, Belgium. Mr. Townsend is at present United States minister at Lisbon, and his transfer leaves a vacancy in the Portuguese mission, for which a selection has already been made and will shortly be announced.

Shafter Taken Suddenly Ill.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 17.—Major General William R. Shafter has arrived here from Washington. When nearing Buffalo General Shafter was seized with a severe chill and upon his arrival he took to bed. The post surgeon at Fort Porter was sent for and reported that the general was threatened with a recurring attack of Cuban fever.

Chinese Rebelled.

HONG KONG, April 17.—The villagers of Taih Po Sun, one of the newly acquired places in the British territory on the Hong Kong mainland, rebelled and burned some British mat sheds. They are now armed and occupy the hills. Troops have been sent to quell the disturbance.

Mortgage Obligations Extended.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The administration has notified the Cuban planters delegation here that mortgage obligations in Cuba will be extended for one year.

REPLY TO LEE

The War Department Will Inform the South Dakota Governor

That Volunteers Will Be Sent Home as Soon as Arrangements Are Made.

Even Now Those Who Desire Discharges For Good Reasons Are Returning.

Six Months Additional Service Clause Is Not Considered Compulsory.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The war department will reply to the telegram of Governor Lee of South Dakota to President McKinley, asking for the immediate muster out and return of the South Dakota troops in the Philippines, that the troops will be brought home as deemed expedient by the United States, and as soon as possible with the transports at hand. It is held at the war department that the law requiring the muster out of troops contemplates that the executive department shall have ample time to issue the necessary orders and make the necessary preparations to properly discharge the soldiers and bring them home. The provision in the bill allowing the volunteers in the Philippines to be enlisted for six months may be construed to mean the volunteers will not be mustered out before that time, if they are necessary to the government. That this view will not be tenable if the troops demand to be mustered out is generally conceded, for Chairman Hull stated on the floor of the house when asked if the six months clause would be construed to continue the volunteers in the Philippines if they wanted to come home, replied that he had the assurance of the administration that such would not be the construction.

An official of the department said that the matter was in the hands of General Otis, and it would be satisfactorily arranged by him, and the volunteers in the islands. Already those who desired to leave because of pressing business needs, or because the support of their families depends on their return, are being discharged.

GOVERNOR LEE TO M'KINLEY

Letter Asking the President to Recall South Dakota Troops.

PIERRE, S. D., April 15.—Governor Lee has addressed a letter to President McKinley, requesting the early return of the First South Dakota volunteer infantry, now under command of General Otis, in the Philippines. The governor takes the position that the First South Dakota regiment was enlisted for the war against Spain, which was ended by the signing of the Paris peace treaty. Governor Lee says:

"Our people take great pride in their soldiers. They have viewed their brilliant exploits and their gallant devotion to the tasks assigned them with a pride which is both natural and pardonable, but a further display of their Ability and Willingness to Die

in obedience to orders of their superiors can neither add to their glory or their country's honor.

"The hundreds of relatives and thousands of friends of this regiment would willingly bear the loss of their best manhood of the state if they felt that their soldiers were fighting to defend homes and firesides, or to expel despotism from any quarter of the earth, but they have reason to regard the further sacrifice of our soldiers in a conflict against liberty and in the interest of exploiting imperialism, as totally incompatible with the spirit of our institutions and a more grievous hardship than we should be compelled to bear."

FREIGHT TRAIN WRECKED.

Northern Pacific Engineer and Fireman Killed in Idaho.

MOSCOW, Ida., April 15.—At 9 a. m. the engine, tender and four cars of a freight train on the Lewiston extension on the Northern Pacific went over an embankment. Engineer Mat Ralston and Fireman Fred Lemon were killed. The wrecked locomotive and cars lie half embedded in the stream, 100 feet below the track. Fireman Lemon was killed instantly and his body was shockingly mangled. Engineer Ralston was still alive when found, but died three hours later. The wreck was caused by the recent heavy rains.

Colorado Prairie Fires.

CHEYENNE WELLS, Colo., April 15.—Hundreds of square miles of grazing land have been burned over by prairie fires, south, east and west of Cheyenne Wells. Thousands of cattle have been driven to other ranges. Still further west on Wild Horse, another fire has started. It has already burned over 20 square miles.

Alger Returns to Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A dispatch has been received at the war department, from Secretary Alger, who has just arrived at Fort Monroe, saying that he will reach Washington during the afternoon. It had been expected that the secretary would go to New York, but he changed his mind since leaving San Juan.

Officials Doubt the Story.

CHICAGO, April 15.—The Burlington officials here say a wreck on their road would be reported to them, and, as they have no advices of a wreck at Sheridan, Wy., they do not believe one has occurred there.

NOT PLUNDER

Mr. Croker Objects to That Term as Applied to Incidental Political Gains.

Admits That He Personally Profits by His Leadership of Tammany.

Judicial Candidates Had Contributed to Funds For Campaign Purposes,

But Not Under Compulsion—Croker's Partner Controls Judicial Sales.

NEW YORK, April 15.—The Mazet investigating committee has resumed its sessions here. The investigation of the city government has so far been confined chiefly to the police and building departments, and to direct and indirect efforts to ascertain the extent of the influence exercised by Richard Croker. The understanding that Mr. Croker would take the witness stand created great interest and the room was crowded. In the beginning of Mr. Croker's testimony he admitted, in reply to questions of Mr. Moss, that he was considered the leader of the Tammany faction. Following that concession, Mr. Croker admitted that he had been consulted regarding the selection of men for official positions in the city government, but denied that he had dictated appointments. He conceded the proposition that he

Had Probably Greater Influence

with the municipal administration than any other citizen. He was a believer in the theory that the party in power should have all the offices. He had interested himself in the Amsterdam avenue and Astoria Gas questions, because the people's rights were involved, and he had notified the Tammany members of the municipal assembly to attend sessions and vote on those questions, because it was their duty to do so. He could tell nothing about contributors to campaign funds, and rendered no account to them in any committee of Tammany, of which committee he was the chairman, of moneys disbursed by him. He said judicial candidates had contributed to the campaign fund, but not on compulsion; their individual donations might have been as much as $7,000 or $8,000; none of them had paid as much as $10,000 to $18,000.

Mr. Moss had, Mr. Croker said, been deposed from the police board because he was not in sympathy with the party in power; his work was all right, but his politics were at fault.

Mr. Croker said his partner in the real estate business was Peter F. Meyer, who was also connected with the dock board.

Mr. Moss tried to bring out that judicial sales had been given to Mr. Croker's real estate firm, on account of the political influence of the witness. Mr. Croker said he knew that at the present time his firm had nearly all of the judicial sales.

Objected to Calling It Plunder.

"So that if you have a controlling voice in the affairs of that party," asked Mr. Moss, "and secure the nomination of true men, you may be sure that at least in the real estate exchange, and in the firm of Meyer & Croker, you will, as a true Democrat, get some of that profit?"

"We at least expect to be befriended," said Mr. Croker.

"Then you are working for your own pocket?"

"All the time, the same as you are," replied the witness. "It is to the party belongs the spoils," added Mr. Croker.

"And to the boss belongs the lion's share of the plunder?" sneered Mr. Moss.

Mr. Croker resented the use of the words "spoils" and "plunder." He saw nothing wrong in receiving profits that came through appointees of the organization.

RED BOOK GOES.

Decision of Judge Biddle Which Practically Admits It as Evidence.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15.—After considerable argument by counsel for the defense and the district attorney, Judge Biddle decided that Witness Goldsmith, former clerk in the Peoples bank, should be permitted to testify as to entries in the "red book" and their connection with the regular bank books. The decision practically admits the famous "red book" as evidence against Senator Quay.

SHERIDAN AT MANILA.

Lieutenant Meyer, Three Privates and Six Children Died.

MANILA, April 15.—The United States transport Sheridan, having on board the Twelfth and a battalion of the Seventeenth infantry, has arrived. On the night of April 11, Lieutenant Meyer disappeared from the ship. The weather was intensely hot and the lieutenant was sleeping on deck and it is supposed that he fell overboard. Three privates and six children of privates died of pneumonia.

Wisconsin Saw Mill Destroyed.

As a Forest Reserve and Park.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The president has prepared a proclamation setting apart 136,000 acres of land on the south side of Lake Tahoe, Cal., as a forestry reserve and public park.

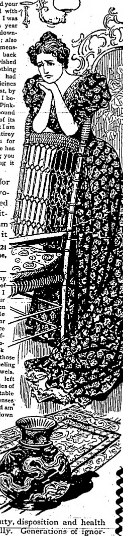
Woman's Dread

The terror of many women's lives is menstruation.

Such women wear themselves out with suffering and seem to think there is no relief from the monthly pains.

Miss Emily F. Hass, of 148 Freeman Street, Greenpoint, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I wish to state that I used your Vegetable Compound with the greatest success. I was very sick for nearly a year with hysteria, was downhearted and nervous; also suffered with painful menstruation and pain in back and limbs. I often wished for death, thinking nothing would cure me. I had doctors, but their medicines did me no good. At last, by the advice of a friend, I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with very little hope of its doing me any good, but I am happy to say I am entirely cured. Thanking you for the good your medicine has done me, I am sending you my testimonial, hoping it will help others."



Special advice for every suffering woman can be secured free of cost by writing to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for it.

Mrs. C. D. Smith, 221 Eleventh St., Racine, Wis., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I gladly give you my testimonial in favor of your remedies. When I first commenced your treatment I had been suffering from female troubles and weakness for some time. Menses were irregular, coming too often, and were very painful. I could not walk a great distance, had those terrible bearing-down feeling in the lower part of bowels, backache, and pain in left ovary. I used five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and my menses have become regular, and am cured of that bearing-down feeling after walking. I consider your Compound one of the best medicines there is for those complaints peculiar to women. I thank you for the good advice you gave me. I will gladly recommend your medicine, and hope that every one who suffers as I did will give it a trial."

To sacrifice beauty, disposition and health to a false idea is folly. Generations of ignorance have handed down belief in the necessity of monthly suffering. A healthy woman should experience but little pain and only a moderate amount of inconvenience.

Mrs. Van Oleft Advises Women.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—For several years my health was miserable. I suffered the most dreadful pains, and was almost on the verge of insanity. I consulted one of the best physicians in New York, and he pronounced my disease a fibroid tumor, advising an operation without delay, saying that it was my only chance for life. Other doctors prescribed strong and violent medicine, and one said I was incurable, another told me my only salvation was galvanic batteries, which I tried, but nothing relieved me. One day a friend called and begged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began its use and took several bottles. From the very first bottle there was a wonderful change for the better. The tumor has disappeared entirely and my old spirits have returned. I heartily recommend your medicine to all suffering women."—Mrs. Van Cleft, 416 Saunders Ave., Jersey City Heights, N. J.

NEED 100,000

That Number of Men, According to the Opinion of General Lawton,

Will Be Necessary For the Subjugation of the Philippine Islands.

Could Chase Natives Back and Forth With a Much Smaller Force,

But to Hold Territory Taken a Large Number Will Be Required.

NEW YORK, April 18.—A dispatch to the World from Manila says: Major General Lawton at Paite authorized the World correspondent to make this statement:

"The present prospect is that one hundred thousand troops will be necessary to pacify the Philippine islands."

General Lawton's expedition has been ordered to Manila, and will return at once. All the territory he captured will be evacuated and all the launches seized will be restored to their original owners—that is to say they will be given back to the persons from whom Aguinaldo's soldiers took them.

After giving the opinion that 100,000 men will be required to subdue these islands, General Lawton explained the situation to the World correspondent as follows:

"The difficulties in the way are those in fighting guerillas in a tropical country.

"With my brigade I could force my way from one end of the island to the other, if I did not have to hold the territory I traversed. But leaving garrisons behind would soon eat up the whole force."

General Lawton regretted exceedingly being compelled to evacuate the territory he had captured.

REBELS IN FORCE.

Have Concentrated Near Pasig During the Absence of Lawton's Expedition.

MANILA, April 18.—During the absence of Major General Lawton's expedition to the Santa Cruz district, on the southeastern side of Laguna de Bay, the insurgents have been concentrating at the northern end of the lake, near Pasig, and the American scouts report that several thousand are already there.

Major General Lawton's expedition to the Laguna de Bay district, re-embarked Sunday evening, anchored for the night at the head of the Pasig river and reached Manila Monday morning, bringing all the men and the captured insurgents boats. Its objects, namely the capture of the insurgents' boats and the distribution of the proclamation throughout the lake region, have been attained.

General Lawton immediately began preparations for an important expedition on land. There has been no fighting on the lake for three days.

General Otis regards the situation here cheerfully, and feels that with the work already done and that which he expects certainly to accomplish, the rebels will eventually be subdued forever. He said:

"The insurgents are moving eastward, and will soon be in the mountains. There they will become merely bands of robbers and they will fight among themselves.

"We shall not stop our operations because of the rainy season. The rebels are counting upon a cessation of hostilities on our part, but we intend to keep right on."

FILIPINOS HAVE AN ALLY.

Climate Depended Upon to Kill Off American Troops.

NEW YORK, April 18.—A Hong Kong letter to The World says:

"We are weak and you are strong," said Dr. Gallicano Apacible, the head of the Filipino junta here, but we have an ally and you have none."

"We have 70,000 stands of arms and 80,000 troops in the field, and sufficient material to make cartridges to supply our troops for four years to come,

"Our ally is the climate of the Philippines. Your bullets cannot kill one of our men where disease will kill twenty of your's, once you begin to advance into the interior. We will harrass your advance at the same time that we welcome it.

"We cannot fight pitched battles with you, and we do not need to. We shall be here today and there tomorrow, attacking, then flying. You can no more catch us or conquer us than you can the wind."

Youth seems to be the invariably first requirement of leadership among the Filipinos. Only the younger generation of half-breeds have had the advantage of education. Dr. Apacible and Dr. Santos (after Apacible the most prominent member of the Hong Kong junta) are under 25, and both have received the degree of doctor of laws in Spain. Between them and the numerous young men who are their associates, and the mass of Filipinos, there is about as much resemblance as between a quadroon and a full-blooded negro. They were led to organize the rebellion by a priest; priests educated them, and by the irony of fate, now holds hundreds of friars as prisoners.

Detroit at Port Limon.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The Detroit has arrived at Port Limon. She will sail during the day for Greytown and afterwards for Bluefields.

RALEIGH AT HOME.

NEW YORK, April 18.—The celebration attending the return of the United States cruiser Raleigh, Captain Coghlan, from Manila occurred during the day.

The Raleigh, accompanied by two small vessels captured from the Spaniards last summer, and a fleet of about 25 excursion steamers and tugboats paraded from Tompkinsville to Grant's tomb and from there back to anchorage in the North river off Thirty-fourth street.

The cruiser left her anchorage off Tompkinsville shortly before noon. An hour before that time a drizzling rain commenced to fall and this soon turned into a steady downpour, which continued the remainder of the day. The air was raw and the officers and men of the Raleigh stood upon the decks three hours drenched to the skin and shivering with the cold. There were very few people along the river front in the lower part of the city, but great crowds assembled in Riverside park overlooking the Hudson and men, women and children stood there for hours. By far the

was in the vicinity of Grant's tomb, which was the turning point of the parade. A national salute was fired there by the Raleigh and also by the captured Spanish prizes and the scene was made a memorable one by the shrieking of a hundred steam whistles from excursion boats and other steamers and cheers from people on shore and the vessels in the river. Preceding the parade a delegation from the citizens' reception committee, numbering not more than a score, went aboard the Raleigh. All hands on the cruiser were called to quarters and Mayor Van Wyck and the other committee men were received with naval formality. Captain Coghlan stood at the gangway and received the visitors and escorted them immediately to his cabin. The ceremonies there were very brief, consuming not more than five minutes. The mayor in a few words welcomed the Raleigh to New York and extended the freedom of the city to the officers and men. Captain Coghlan replied briefly.

NOT LIKELY TO MEDDLE.

German Opinion of the Attitude of American Delegates at The Hague.

BERLIN, April 18.—Although the American ambassador here, Andrew D. White, has not received formal instructions on the subject, the officials of the embassy suppose that the American commission which will represent the United States at The Hague peace conference, will carefully abstain from mixing in purely European questions, but will take an earnest part in the discussion of the application of arbitration and improvements in the Geneva rules for the protection of field hospitals, and that they will urge the principles the United States advanced at the Paris conference of 1856, coupling unanimity as to belligerent non-contraband property seizure on the high seas with a pledge to abstain from privateering. This the powers then refused to adopt, but they may now be willing to consider it.

TO SURVEY FOR A CABLE.

The Nero Preparing to Take Soundings From Honolulu to Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18.—The United States steamer Nero has come down from Mare Island, and is taking in coal preparatory to her departure for Honolulu at the end of this week. The Nero has been entirely refitted and repaired for the work in which she is to engage, the exploration and survey of a route for a submarine cable from Honolulu to Manila. The route between San Francisco and Honolulu having been thoroughly surveyed, the Nero will begin at Honolulu and make soundings from there to the island of Luzon, or a mid way island, and Guam. No soundings have ever been made over this part of the Pacific.

No One Secured a Victory.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The secretary of state in conversation said that neither of the three powers to the treaty of Berlin had secured a victory in the arrangement of the Samoan matter, nor suffered a defeat. All three of them were, he believed, actuated by the same desire to reach a peaceful and honorable solution of a state of things, which was not only most regretable at this time, but likely, if neglected, to go rapidly from bad to worse.

Norwegian Railway Construction.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—Victor Nelson, United States consul at Bergen, reports to the state department that the Norwegian government has projected a large extension of its railroad system, proposing to expend over $3,000,000 per annum for four years in that direction. The consul says that a large amount of railroad supplies will be required and he is willing to do anything in his power to aid American manufacturers to secure contracts.

Very High Water at Pierre.

PIERRE, S. D., April 18.—The river is still rising here, coming up a foot since Sunday, and is now at 14.7 feet. The people in the lower part of Fort Pierre have all been compelled to move out, but it will take several feet more to do any damage on this side. The water is at a higher stage than at any time since the flood of 1881.

Sawmill Blown Up.

OTTUMWA, Ia., April 18.—Harrison Fletcher's sawmill was blown to pieces by a boiler explosion. The proprietor's young son was killed and several employes were slightly injured.

New Mine Inspector.

DES MOINES, Ia., April 18.—Governor Shaw has appointed John Veiner of Lucas county state mine inspector to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Inspector Morgan Thomas.

LEE TO TROOPS

Commander of the Seventh Army Corps Delivers a Farewell Address.

No Troops Have Won Greater Distinction For Drill or Discharge of Duty.

Would Have Led the Assault on Havana Had One Been Necessary.

Brooke Approves the Plan of Gen. Monteagnedo For a Rural Guard.

HAVANA, April 18.—The last general order issued by Major General Fitz Hugh Lee to his command, the Seventh army corps, is in part as follows:

"An order has been received which moves the last regiment of the Seventh army corps across the sea to be mustered out of the service of the United States, and the ranks of its organization will be forever broken. The record made by the officers and men, however, will be forever preserved on the pages of the military history in which their country will inscribe their deeds. No troops have won a greater reputation for discipline, drill, manly discharge of duty, soldierly conduct and cheerful obedience to all orders.

Would Have Led the Assault.

"The president's assurance that had the war with Spain continued the Seventh army corps would have been selected to lead the assault on the Havana lines, proves that the corps possessed the confidence of the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, a confidence shared by his fellow countrymen.

"It is gratifying, in reviewing the career of the corps, to remember the harmony which has existed among the 60,000 soldiers who answered the roll call at Tampa, Jacksonville, Savannah and in Cuba, whether it were the volunteers who afterwards, at various times, broke ranks and resumed the duties of citizenship, or the regulars whose standards, still flying, are now the advance sentinels of American progress and civilization.

"The soldiers of the North and South took the sunshine and storm of camp together and marched side by side under one flag, to one cause, and for one country."

Major General Brooke, the governor general of Cuba, has approved the plan of the Cuban general, Monteaguedo, to establish in Santa Clara a rural guard of 500 men, with Monteaguedo as its commander, and Colonel Consuegra as second in command.

It is announced that a London syndicate will purchase the Sagua, Cabarien, Cardenas and Sbanilla railroad. This will put all the inland railroads, except three small lines, in British hands.

Commodore Cromwell, captain of the port of Havana, is settling the lightermen's and shipowners' dispute in a satisfactory manner.

BELIEVES IN SOCIALISM.

Rev. Thomas of Peoples Church, Chicago, Declares Himself.

CHICAGO, April 18.—Rev. H. W. Thomas broke down the barriers of restraint in the Peoples church and expressed himself a believer in socialism.

"This subject has caused me more mental and spiritual struggle during the last three years than any other, but the voice of duty, love of country, of man and God called me down," he said to his congregation in McVicker's theater. "The one solution that I can see in the future is some form of co-operation, some form of mutualism. It does not hurt me if you call it socialism."

From the galleries there came an answering thunder of applause. There was a silence in the body of the church and in the boxes, broken only here and there with a slight ripple of handclapping.

ICE JAMS FORMING.

Northern Wisconsin Rivers Reported Doing Much Damage.

MILWAUKEE, April 18.—A Journal special from Marinette, Wis., says:

The Maine river is very high and is rising and serious danger is apprehended. Ice jams 18 to 20 feet high have formed near Quinnesec Falls, at Sixty Islands and at Grand Rapids. The flats are all flooded. The bridge of the Soo road near Pembina Falls is in danger of being carried away by ice. The Pike river and other tributaries have overflowed their banks, and are raging torrents. High water on the Menominee has just commenced. Ice jams are forming in many streams and the water is flooding miles of country.

Berlin Is Alarmed.

BERLIN, April 18.—The entire German population is greatly alarmed at the news that Emperor William intends to introduce into the Prussian diet a government measure creating the city of Berlin and its suburbs into a separate province, and largely destroying the present government of the municipality.

Ohio at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18. — The United States transport steamer Ohio arrived from Manila via Nagasaki. She returned in ballast, and brought no passengers.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—Vice President Hobart is reported greatly improved. He sat up the greater part of the day and feels much better.

Goes in Business at Warren.

P. S. Ware, who edited the Thief River Falls Press for a number of years, and who is now located at Brainerd as secretary of a government pine estimating commission, arrived from the south Friday, and returned to Brainerd Tuesday. During his stay here he purchased the stock and business of the Chapin Drug Co., and took possession. Mr. A. S. Apgar, who has been the efficient manager of the business for some time, will remain in charge. Mr. Ware has forwarded his resignation to Washington and he and Mrs. Ware will probably take up their residence here about the 10th of May.—Warren Register.

A CITY

That Is What Thief River Falls Is.

Chief Justice Start has decided that the city of Thief River Falls is legally incorporated. The constitutionality is affirmed of the curative act making the de facto city of Thief River Falls a city de jure. The attorney general had declined to bring quo warranto proceedings and it was done on authority of the district court of Red Lake. The law was impeached as special legislation. Syllabus:

First Chapter 81, Laws 1897, legalizing the incorporation of cities of the class therein designated, is a general law and constitutional.

Second—The city of Thief River Falls is by virtue of such statute a legal municipal corporation. Order affirmed.

H. Steenerson, of Crookston, represented the city and H. W. Lee the state.

Just the Same Over Here.

From the amount of lumber being sold in Warren these days it is evident that the farmers in the country tributary to this city intend doing a lot of building this spring. The fact that they are erecting new farm buildings and building additions and making extensive repairs to those they now have indicates that the wave of prosperity has already reached them and that they have full confidence in the good times that the future holds in store for them.—Warren Register.

The Wolf Bounty.

The new wolf bounty law provides a bounty of $7 during the first five months of each year for each full grown wolf, $5 at other seasons; $3 for each cub wolf, one-third to be paid by the county, two-thirds by the state; that the town clerk shall see and certify to the wolf carcass and destroy it, after which the person claiming the reward shall make oath before the county auditor as to the fact of the killing, and also that the claimant did not spare the life of any wolf within his power to kill.

St. Hilaire Notes.

From the Spectator.

The anti-secret society meeting did not seem to connect. All of the societies here report new members and none concluded to quit.

Andrew Weatherby, of Brainerd, Kansas, arrived last Thursday with a car of stock and will permanently locate in this vicinity.

Cass Gillette and family left for Crookston last Monday. Mr. Gillette will be the head sawyer for the Crookston Lumber company this summer.

Chas. Alexander has concluded to accept a position here for the summer. As Charles is about the swiftest talker that ever happened we can count on a lively summer.

Supt. Mereen claims that the big mill will do all kinds of business this year as soon as they get started. They intend to start running days as soon as the ice is out of the pond and inside of a month will commence running night and day at full capacity until the end of the season. The heavy demand for lumber has lead the management to conclude that this mill must turn out at least forty million this season. It will be the heaviest cut in the history of the mill.

WILL APPRAISE

The Damages for a Telephone Right-of-Way.

Pursuant to the action begun to secure right-of-way for the long distance telephone line, Judge Watts last week appointed John Cromb, of Crookston, A. Kaiser, of Fosston, and Ingebret Larson, of the town of Sletten, a board of commissioners to determine the valuation to fix upon the amount of compensation for the land required by the Northwest Telephone company in running the long distance, which it proposes to construct from Crookston to Fosston and from Thief River Falls to Winnipeg Junction. In all there are 30 pieces of land to look over in Polk county, eight in Red Lake and 11 in Norman county. The work in Red Lake county will be looked after by Frank Hunt, Red Lake Falls; Dan Patterson, St. Hilaire, and W. T. Mullarky, Thief River Falls.

Not so Very Late.

A. S. Zimmerman laughs at the idea of this spring being one of the latest in the history of the state. In the spring of 1866 wheat was sown later than May 25 and a good crop was harvested. Wheat sown on that date brought twenty-two bushels to the acre. The same spring, Mr. Zimmerman states, he was working for Milo Baldwin, in the township of Medo, and while digging postholes the first of June was unable to penetrate the ground more than twenty inches on account of frost. If we are to judge from Mr. Zimmerman's experience farmers should not be discouraged even though the ground is not in a condition for seeding a month yet.—Eagle Lake News.

NEED 100,000

That Number of Men, According to the Opinion of General Lawton,

Will Be Necessary For the Subjugation of the Philippine Islands.

Could Chase Natives Back and Forth With a Much Smaller Force,

But to Hold Territory Taken a Large Number Will Be Required.

NEW YORK, April 18.—A dispatch to the World from Manila says: Major General Lawton at Paito authorized the World correspondent to make this statement:

"The present prospect is that one hundred thousand troops will be necessary to pacify the Philippine islands."

General Lawton's expedition has been ordered to Manila, and will return at once. All the territory he captured will be evacuated and all the launches seized will be restored to their original owners—that is to say they will be given back to the persons from whom Aguinaldo's soldiers took them.

After giving the opinion that 100,000 men will be required to subdue these islands, General Lawton explained the situation to the World correspondent as follows:

"The difficulties in the way are those in fighting guerillas in a tropical country.

"With my brigade I could force my way from one end of the island to the other, if I did not have to hold the territory I traversed. But leaving garrisons behind would soon eat up the whole force."

General Lawton regretted exceedingly being compelled to evacuate the territory he had captured.

REBELS IN FORCE.

Have Concentrated Near Pasig During the Absence of Lawton's Expedition.

MANILA, April 18.—During the absence of Major General Lawton's expedition to the Santa Cruz district, on the southeastern side of Laguna de Bay, the insurgents have been concentrating at the northern end of the lake, near Pasig, and the American scouts report that several thousand are already there.

Major General Lawton's expedition to the Laguna de Bay district, re-embarked Sunday evening, anchored for the night at the head of the Pasig river and reached Manila Monday morning, bringing all the men and the captured insurgents boats. Its objects, namely the capture of the insurgents' boats and the distribution of the proclamation throughout the lake region, have been attained.

General Lawton immediately began preparations for an important expedition on land. There has been no fighting on the lake for three days.

General Otis regards the situation here cheerfully, and feels that with the work already done and that which he expects certainly to accomplish, the rebels will eventually be subdued forever. He said:

"The insurgents are moving eastward, and will soon be in the mountains. There they will become merely bands of robbers and they will fig themselves.

RALEIGH AT HOME.

NEW YORK, April 18.—The celebration attending the return of the United States cruiser Raleigh, Captain Coghlan, from Manila occurred during the day.

The Raleigh, accompanied by two small vessels captured from the Spaniards last summer, and a fleet of about 25 excursion steamers and tugboats paraded from Tompkinsville to Grant's tomb and from there back to anchorage in the North river off Thirty-fourth street.

The cruiser left her anchorage off Tompkinsville shortly before noon. An hour before that time a drizzling rain commenced to fall and this soon turned into a steady downpour, which continued the remainder of the day. The air was raw and the officers and men of the Raleigh stood upon the decks three hours drenched to the skin and shivering with the cold. There were very few people along the river front in the lower part of the city, but great crowds assembled in Riverside park overlooking the Hudson and men, women and children stood there for hours. By far the

was in the vicinity of Grant's tomb, which was the turning point of the parade. A national salute was fired there by the Raleigh and also by the captured Spanish prizes and the scene was made a memorable one by the shrieking of a hundred steam whistles from excursion boats and other steamers and cheers from people on shore and the vessels in the river. Preceding the parade a delegation from the citizens' reception committee, numbering not more than a score, went aboard the Raleigh. All hands on the cruiser were called to quarters and Mayor Van Wyck and the other committee men were received with naval formality. Captain Coghlan stood at the gangway and received the visitors and escorted them immediately to his cabin. The ceremonies there were very brief, consuming not more than five minutes. The mayor in a few words welcomed the Raleigh to New York and extended the freedom of the city to the officers and men. Captain Coghlan replied briefly.

NOT LIKELY TO MEDDLE.

German Opinion of the Attitude of American Delegates at The Hague.

BERLIN, April 18.—Although the American ambassador here, Andrew D. White, has not received formal instructions on the subject, the officials of the embassy suppose that the American commission which will represent the United States at The Hague peace conference, will carefully abstain from mixing in purely European questions, but will take an earnest part in the discussion of the application of arbitration and improvements in the Geneva rules for the protection of field hospitals, and that they will urge the principles the United States advanced at the Paris conference of 1856, coupling unanimity as to belligerent non-contraband property seizure on the high seas with a pledge to abstain from privateering. This the powers then refused to adopt, but they may now be willing to consider it.

The Nero Preparing to Take Soundings From Honolulu to Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18.—The United States steamer Nero has come down from Mare Island, and is taking in coal preparatory to her departure for Honolulu at the end of this week. The Nero has been entirely refitted and repaired for the work in which she is to engage, the exploration and survey of a route for a submarine cable from Honolulu to Manila. LEE TO TROOPS

Commander of the Seventh Army Corps Delivers a Farewell Address.

No Troops Have Won Greater Distinction For Drill or Discharge of Duty.

Would Have Led the Assault on Havana Had One Been Necessary.

Brooke Approves the Plan of Gen. Monteaguedo For a Rural Guard.

HAVANA, April 18.—The last general order issued by Major General Fitz Hugh Lee to his command, the Seventh army corps, is in part as follows:

"An order has been received which moves the last regiment of the Seventh army corps across the sea to be mustered out of the service of the United States, and the ranks of its organization will be forever broken. The record made by the officers and men, however, will be forever preserved on the pages of the military history in which their country will inscribe their deeds. No troops have won a greater reputation for discipline, drill, manly discharge of duty, soldierly conduct and cheerful obedience to all orders.

Would Have Led the Assault.

"The president's assurance that had the war with Spain continued the Seventh army corps would have been selected to lead the assault on the Havana lines, proves that the corps possessed the confidence of the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, a confidence shared by his fellow countrymen.

"It is gratifying, in reviewing the career of the corps, to remember the harmony which has existed among the 60,000 soldiers who answered the roll call at Tampa, Jacksonville, Savannah and in Cuba, whether it were the volunteers who afterwards, at various times, broke ranks and resumed the duties of citizenship, or the regulars whose standards, still flying, are now the advance sentinels of American progress and civilization.

"The soldiers of the North and South took the sunshine and storm of camp together and marched side by side under one flag, to one cause, and for one country."

Major General Brooke, the governor general of Cuba, has approved the plan of the Cuban general, Monteaguedo, to establish in Santa Clara a rural guard of 500 men, with Monteaguedo as its commander, and Colonel Consuegra as second in command.

It is announced that a London syndicate will purchase the Sagua, Cabarien, Cardenas and Sbanilla railroad. This will put all the inland railroads, except three small lines, in British hands.

Commodore Cromwell, captain of the port of Havana, is settling the lightermen's and shipowners' dispute in a satisfactory manner.

Cass Gillette and family left for Crookston last Monday. Mr. Gillette will be the head sawyer for the Crookston Lumber company this summer.

Chas. Alexander has concluded to accept a position here for the summer. As Charles is about the swiftest talker that ever happened we can count on a lively summer.

Supt. Mereen claims that the big mill will do all kinds of business this year as soon as they get started. They intend to start running days as soon as the ice is out of the pond and inside of a month will commence running night and day at full capacity until the end of the season. The heavy demand for lumber has lead the management to conclude that this mill must turn out at least forty million this season. It will be the heaviest cut in the history of the mill.

WILL APPRAISE

The Damages for a Telephone Right-of-Way.

Pursuant to the action begun to secure right-of-way for the long distance telephone line, Judge Watts last week appointed John Cromb, of Crookston, A. Kaiser, of Fosston, and Ingebret Larson, of the town of Sletten, a board of commissioners to determine the valuation to fix upon the amount of compensation for the land required by the Northwest Telephone company in running the long distance, which it proposes to construct from Crookston to Fosston and from Thief River Falls to Winnipeg Junction. In all there are 30 pieces of land to look over in Polk county, eight in Red Lake and 11 in Norman county. The work in Red Lake county will be looked after by Frank Hunt, Red Lake Falls; Dan Patterson, St. Hilaire, and W. T. Mullarky, Thief River Falls.

Not so Very Late.

A. S. Zimmerman laughs at the idea of this spring being one of the latest in the history of the state. In the spring of 1866 wheat was sown later than May 25 and a good crop was harvested. Wheat sown on that date brought twenty-two bushels to the acre. The same spring, Mr. Zimmerman states, he was working for Milo Baldwin, in the township of Medo, and while digging postholes the first of June was unable to penetrate the ground more than twenty inches on account of frost. If we are to judge from Mr. Zimmerman's experience farmers should not be discouraged even though the ground is not in a condition for seeding a month yet.—Eagle Lake News.

It is very evident that Mr. Alger did not enlist for a short time.

The defeat of the drainage bill can be attributed to the fact that the Red River Valley had a very poor delegation in the house.

President McKinley will visit Minneapolis next summer on his way to the Yellowstone Park where he will spend a short vacation.

Thomas B. Reed, speaker of the house of representatives, is to retire from public life and become a member of a New York law firm. Mr. Reed is one of the ablest men in Washington and will be greatly missed.

While the Red River Valley had an exceedingly able delegation in the senate, just the reverse was true of its representatives in the house. For this reason many important bills of interest to this section failed to pass.

Editor and ex-Congressman Haldor E. Boen is an alderman of Fergus Falls. Fergus is lucky. Its bond debt will at once be wiped out. It will get its lights and water free; telephones will connect every farm in the county with the county capital; it will rain silver dollars once in each week and all the blessings of heaven will be for the asking. Haldor will see to it all for hasn't the Globe told many times how it all should be done.—Alexandria Post-News.

Gov. Merriam has the best job with which to accommodate friends of any man in the country except the president. He will have about 35,000 officers to appoint, and he won't begin until December. When governor he learned what it meant to have people dogging his footsteps for office, but the number he has at his disposal then is not to be compared with those he will have to meet now. When governor he discharged all the obligations he could, and ought now to let those friends who had good jobs be the most importunate in this state for the best ones he has to dispose of from his Washington headquarters. Blessed is the man who hasn't friends and who has no rewards to offer.—Windom Reporter.

From Fenimore Cooper and other authorities we have gained the impression that the Indian is a stolid, severe individual with no sense of the white man's humor, but one red brother showed himself quite a civilized joker the other day in the United States court. He was on the stand in a hotly contested case and Attorney D. R. Bailey, of Sioux Falls, was after him in the most approved fashion of cross-examination. Finally, after apparently frightening the Indian with the awful consequences which would follow the slightest deviation from the truth Mr. Bailey took his most portentous tone and solemn manner and demanded: "Now, sir, I want you to tell me the exact truth, without any shuffling or evasion. I want you to look me square in the eye and tell me how you get your living, sir." The Indian looked straight at Mr. Bailey and with that imperturbable air, familiar to all acquainted with the red men, simply said "Eat." The court room roared, even Judge Carland smiled, and Mr. Bailey let the witness go.—Pioneer Press.

Here's the experience of a valley farmer in getting into stock raising by the gradual process that can be equalled by any one living on Minnesota's broad acres: "In the year 1888 I bought one cow and in the year 1891 one heifer and from those two I have a good grade of cattle, 32 head in number, and from the day I bought the first cow I had plenty of milk and butter for the house, and for the past three years I have sold on an average of $10 per month of butter besides keeping a supply in the house the year round, for my family, consisting of seven in number. In the last four years I have sold $325 worth of cattle all from this cow and heifer. My increase in cattle this spring will be about 14 head of calves. I own but 160 acres of land, have 120 under cultivation and have to hire my cattle herded which costs me $1 for the season. My farming does not interfere with stock raising, but helps it. I raise my own meat and keep about 100 chickens through the year which helps things along considerably. I own horses and machinery enough to operate 320 acres of cultivated land and am about out of debt, and am very well satisfied with this country, but I attribute my success to raising stock and the start from that one cow. I do not think much money can be laid up here in farming alone."—Crookston Times.

THE ICE

It Is Still Thick up at the Red Lake.

J. E. Morrisey came down from Red Lake yesterday and returned today with some castings that were necessary in fitting up the boat upon which he is working, near the mouth of Sandy River. He reports the ice so thick on the lake that on Friday last teams were driving over it at any point. There were sheltered places in the woods where snow to the depth of 18 inches still lingered as late as Sunday. The company that has done extensive logging on the Sandy cut through 3½ feet of ice at the mouth of that stream, with the intention of driving some piling and found the sand in the river bed frozen so hard that it was impossible to do the work.

The work of repairing the steamer Martin Lally, now owned by the Red Lake Falls Lumber company, is completed and that craft will be launched as soon as the ice breaks up. The new boat now is in first class condition.

There is likely to be some trouble getting the logs down which have been banked on the small streams, as they are afraid to start them now while the streams are full owing to the ice in the lake, and they fear the water will be pretty nearly gone by the time the lake breaks up.

The action of the government in suspending payment to the contractors on the "dead and down" is occasioning considerable trouble as the logs will probable be held until after the driving stage of water is gone. This means financial ruin to many contractors.—Tuesday's Crookston Times.

Getting Ready.

Last evening those interested in base ball assembled at the Great Northern depot and organized a team for the coming season composed of some of the best players of the city. Dr. N. M. Watson was elected manager and Ed. Coenen captain of the team. Judging from the past showing of our boys Red Lake Falls will have one of the strongest amateur teams in the valley.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

Not Illegal.

Judge Lochren yesterday rendered an important decision relating to the use of trade checks. The court holds that trading checks do not in any way resemble money of the United States, and that their manufacture or use is not illegal. A great many of the merchants of this city, who issue trade checks, are interested in this decision.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

SELECTIONS

WHEN DEWEY WAS ILL.

His Shipmates Gave Him Up For Dead at One Time.

"I was in intimate relations with Admiral Dewey for eight or ten months, and I never heard him mention politics. Therefore I have no sort of knowledge as to the admiral's political views or inclinations. Broadly speaking, politics is never discussed by the officers on board American warships. The navy has no politics. Its business and sole purpose are to do the work assigned to it as one arm of the national defense."

So spoke Mr. Thomas W. Worthington of Birmingham to a reporter. Mr. Worthington was graduated from Annapolis in 1882 and was assigned to the Juniata, commanded by Dewey, who at that time held the rank of commander in the navy. Mr. Worthington was at that time an ensign and was a flag officer for Dewey. He resigned from the navy to engage in private business, but retains some extremely interesting impressions of the now famous admiral. He is very reluctant to speak of these matters, but his friends managed in some way to draw him out privately yesterday.

"Admiral Dewey was given up to die while in command of the Juniata in 1883," said Mr. Worthington. "The ship sailed for the far east on the long course. Commander Dewey's health was very bad and got very much worse after we sailed from the United States. We got into Fayal, in the Azores, and lay there for half a month. The commander was extremely ill, and the ship's surgeon couldn't tell what was the matter with him. The commander himself couldn't tell. Nobody knew. Doctors invited on board were no wiser than the rest of us. Finally Dewey gave orders for the ship to sail for Gibraltar. Arrived there, our surgeon went ashore and got two army surgeons from the British garrison to come off to the ship and consult with him regarding the commander's condition. They failed to discover the cause of the patient's suffering. We remained at Gibraltar for a time and proceeded from there to Malta. At Malta it was decided to take Commander Dewey to the hospital. It was there discovered by one of the doctors that the commander was suffering from abscess of the liver.

"A surgical operation was decided upon, but the doctors informed the sufferer that the chances were greatly against his recovery. Dewey made his will and prepared for death. He dictated to me letters to members of his family, and they were mailed. I also, under his instructions, drew up a detailed statement as to his private affairs, so that there might be no necessary trouble after his death. The surgeons performed the operation, and of course the use of the knife made the patient weaker than ever. Those who assisted in the painful work became convinced afterward that Dewey could not long survive, and they told him so. He received the statement calmly and completed his arrangements for passing out. We staid there a month, during which time I attended Dewey in the hospital. He showed no signs of recovery, and so finally we had to leave him, expecting never to see him again. We sailed for the east and spent a year or two in Chinese waters. The next time I heard of my old commander he was in charge of another ship."

"Tell us about Admiral Dewey in his personal relations," Mr. Worthington's friends urged upon him.

"He is the most sociable and companionable of men," was the answer. "He is what we may call an all around good fellow."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Loubet Resembles Grant.

"Loubet continually reminds me of General Grant," writes Theodore Stanton. "He even resembles Grant somewhat physically, with his medium height, thickset, large face and head, which, set on a short neck, moves slowly and almost heavily. In intellect and temperament the two men also are much alike. Loubet is taciturn, simple of dress, speech and manner. He has great common sense, but no brilliancy. He is undemonstrative and has but few warm friends. He dislikes show and will restore to the Elysee palace the quiet simplicity of the days of M. Grevy. He surely will banish the mimicry of royalty introduced by M. Carnot and exaggerated by M. Faure."

Rapid Alethorama.

It is announced that two Frenchmen have just constructed a new machine surpassing the cinematograph in important particulars. Combined with sharpness of image the inventors have succeeded in vastly increasing the number of exposures per unit of time. The speed of the cinematograph may be taken as 25 exposures per second. This is said to be too slow for photographing rapid movements, but it is professed that the alethorama will take 2,000 photographs per second. To do this the machine must use 50 meters of film per second, or not far short of two miles per minute.

The Horseless Carriage.

Speaking of the popularity of electric carriages, The Scientific American says that one year ago a company put 13 horseless electric cabs for hire on the streets of New York. Today the same company operates 100 cabs, and they are so popular that they have to be taken from the public cab stands and kept in the cabhouse to fill telephone and messenger orders for regular customers. From a health point of view, The Scientific American thinks the advent of the horseless carriage is to prove a great public blessing.

DUE TO GOOD ROADS.

THEY ARE MAKING FARMING PROFITABLE IN NEW JERSEY.

Home Builders Flocking to Localities That Have Improved Highways. Prices of Rents and Farm Lands Have Advanced.

A point of enthusiasm in road building has been reached which threatens the peace of mind of the state authorities of New Jersey, particularly the lawmakers.

This state apparently has the lead in the hard road business, and a perusal of the report of the road improvement department indicates that all hard roads lead to urban, suburban and agricultural prosperity.

The collated facts demonstrate that the suburban localities having the largest number of hard roads, particularly stone roads, are securing the largest number of home builders and a noticeable increase in valuations, while in the agricultural districts where stone roads exist farms are renting quickly and selling at higher prices, while those on the lines of the old dirt roads are fast going to decay.

These facts are forcing themselves on the attention of the farmers, and as a result the agricultural counties are now making a rush for state aid to build hard roads.

The largest farming county in the state is Burlington, which stretches from the Delaware river to the ocean. This county has on file application for 116 miles of road, more than one-fourth demanded by the whole state.

In seeking the reason why Burlington wants to add 116 miles to the 76 that it already has the new status of the stone road question is ascertained. They are needed to establish quicker connections between the farmer and producer of food stuffs and the consumer.

They argue that farming is becoming profitable because the middlemen are avoided—that is, the railroads that carry the freight and the commission men who, as a rule, absorb it all.

With stone roads farmers are able to carry their own products to the cities and find direct customers, and, even better, they do not have to depend on the city consumer entirely, but they can easily reach those who live in the towns, boroughs and villages, who, as a rule, were supplied from the city markets through the local stores, because farmers and growers preferred to ship by rail rather than waste time and horseflesh on mud roads.

The small communities are multiplying fast, and there is a material improvement in home consumption, and the result is the farmer has become enthusiastic and almost hysterical over stone roads.

The demand of Burlington is unusually heavy, and under the ordinary slow progress of the present scheme it will take at least ten years for the county to get the roads that it has already petitioned for.

Somerset county, which has been strong in its opposition to the stone road improvements, is now second in its demands, asking for 61 miles. Somerset has farmers who want the roads for exactly the same reason that Burlington asks for its 116 miles, but Somerset has large estates, elegant homes and rich New York commuters.

They find themselves in rivalry with Union and Bergen counties because many New Yorkers have built homes in these counties on account of the advantages of hard roads. Somerset finds that it is missing too many good things in the real estate line. So now they are clamoring for stone roads at a cost of a quarter of a million of dollars.

The intense interest that is taken in good roads is shown by the fact that 100 more miles are now petitioned for than the road department built since it came into existence. There are now filed in the office of Henry I. Budd, the state road commissioner, petitions from nearly every county.

The ability to construct a greater number of miles each year arises from a better understanding on the part of the state and counties of the principle of road building. It is claimed now that New Jersey is getting better roads for less money than any other state.

On that account Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island, Virginia, Maryland and Connecticut have all officially inspected New Jersey roads and favorably commented on them. Commissioner Budd in his report says:

"Roads are now costing all the way from 20 to 70 cents a square yard. In wet places, where telford is necessary, the cost reaches 73 cents. The cost of the majority of our roads this year in the lower part of the state ranges from 50 to 60 cents a square yard.

"In the upper part of the state, in Morris and Passaic counties, they are building the bed of stone four and six inches deep; consequently the expense, where rock is mined along the road, ranges only from 20 to 45 cents per square yard."

It is only a matter of a few years when New Jersey will have three complete avenues reaching from one end of the state to the other. One line will run from Atlantic City to Jersey City and from Jersey City to the western boundaries of Morris and Passaic counties.

To show the stimulus that hard roads have for farmers the commissioner ascertained some facts made at the Gloucester ferry—an outlet for the west Jersey farmers and fruit growers. Since the roads leading to Gloucester City have been macadamized from 1,600 to 1,900 teams pass to and from on the ferry, while the number during the days of the mud roads was from 200 to 400.

The teams now carry from 130 to 175 baskets of vegetables and fruits, while previously there were only 50 baskets carried.

A Dog-oned Good Fisher.

Charley Tedford, of the Saddlerock Restaurant, has a fine black dog, answering to the name of "Nig," who has developed into one of the most successful fishers of the village. A few days ago, Tedford and John Soll, of the St. Hilaire Spectator, on one of their successful (?) hunting expeditions, shot a good-sized pickerel as he came up under a bridge on which they were standing. Tedford told "Nig" to get him, which he did, under two feet of water. Sunday they were out again, along the lake shore, and "Nig," keen-eyed and wary, saw a big pickerel stealthily splitting the water along the shore, and when opposite pounced on him and brought him out. Valuable dog, whose breed should be increased.—Cass Lake Times.

Still at His Hobby.

S. H. Withey has a room of his residence devoted entirely to Indian relics. He has been several years in collecting the different oddities and now has one of the finest collections in the state. At every opportunity Mr. Withey adds to his relics, and recently secured, among other things, a very valuable Indian coat. The embroidery upon this garment is quite a contrast to some of the bead work we commonly see.—Crookston Tribune.

THREE BANKS

That Is What Red Lake Falls Will Have.

M. O. Sortedahl, of the local abstract firm, will open up a banking institution in Red Lake Falls on the 3d of May. This news he conveyed to the Gazette last week, before his return to Crookston where he has made final arrangements for his removal to this city. Mr. Sortedahl had contemplated the move for some time, and about the first of April went to the cities to perfect his plans and get everything in readiness to begin. Upon his return he was surprised to learn that a new bank was being organized here, but it was then too late to back out, he says and he will go ahead. May third is the date set for the new bank's opening. He has engaged the services of a bank cashier of fourteen years' experience to assume that position here. Both Mr. Sortedahl and his cashier are men of families. The old adage that it never rains but it pours is again verified.

Those interested in the organization of the new state bank met Friday night and named the institution "The Bank of Red Lake Falls." A committee was appointed to look up a location, and other matters pertaining to organization discussed. As yet no conclusion has been reached as to location. Several corners are under consideration, and the bank may go into a new brick structure.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Officers Elected.

The members of the Fire Department at a meeting held last week elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Chief—James Farr.
First assistant chief—C. E. Traverse.
Second assistant chief—Anton Pederson.
Secretary—Lars Backe.
Treasurer—C. A. Robbecke.
Foreman engine company—H. Fuller.
Hose company—Andy Smith.
Hook and ladder—Phil Zeh.

Senator Myran Home.

Senator Myran returned home from St. Paul last Friday, and is looking and feeling well. He is naturally greatly disappointed over the defeat of the drainage appropriation bill, which he worked so hard for. The regular drainage bill passed, which makes it lawful to straighten the Wild Rice river. Mr. Myran lays the defeat of the appropriation to Mr. Jacobson, the House leader, who took revenge because his pet measures were defeated. But next time Mr. Myran predicts the appropriation will be made. He feels confident he can secure its passage through the senate at an early date, the same as he did this session. He also secured the passage of several bills, of local importance, and took an active part in the measures beneficial to to this section. While regretting the defeat of the drainage appropriation, the gross earnings bill and the bill giving Red Lake a slice of Polk county funds, the senator looks with satisfaction upon the many good bills which did become laws, and is prepared to make a stronger fight than ever at the next session for the defeated bills.—Norman County Index.

FARMER HOVEY

Threw the Champion Wrestler of North Dakota.

Fred Fehr, the champion wrestler of North Dakota, who masked under the name of F. J. Rogers, was pitted against five men at the Athletic club hall last Friday evening. Under the rules, which were made by Fehr, he was to throw five men in one hour of actual wrestling, falls against him not to count. This point was disputed by the local wrestlers and so Fehr won because they failed to come up.

Joe Steinfest was the first man pitted against Fehr and he succeeded in giving him a very lively match but was finally thrown as was also Fred Halter, the second man. Gilbert Hovey was the next man to wrestle Fehr and he succeeded in throwing the North Dakota champion in about five minutes. The local wrestlers understood that if they threw Fehr once they were to win the wrestle, and so refused to go with the mill. Fehr, who says he was not in good condition, was badly played out and it is doubtful if he would have won had the wrestling gone on.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

C. C. Knappen has sold the Fisher Bulletin to Geo. H. Sheire.

Congressman Eddy will be one of the speakers at the great Norwegian celebration at the auditorium in Chicago on May 17th.

The first issue of Judge Ives' newspaper, the Cass Lake Times, was published last week and it is by far the best paper printed in Beltrami county. It is filled with readable matter, well edited and printed.

In speaking of Charley Towne's trip to Paris for the Cosmopolitan the Hibbing Sentinel says "the nation wishes him a godspeed and safe return." Possibly that's so; at least no one would wish Charley any harm, but we fear the Sentinel over estimates the anxiety of the nation in this matter, and assumes to speak for a number of people it has never had an introduction to.—Aitkin Age.

There has been a good deal of the usual maundering rot in the legislature about the "poor" farmer. The farmer is not poor. Taken as a class he is the richest man in the world. Taking the whole population of the cities and not one man out of twenty has a clear title to more than he wears on his back. Take the average farming community, and nine farmers out of ten are solvent, and have something laid by for a rainy day, and still they talk about the "poor" farmer!—Princeton Union.

A man who is traveling for a farm machinery house, said to us the other day, he never saw a year when it was as easy to sell goods as this year. That in March their factory was 85 carloads behind their orders and they couldn't possibly get out more than four carloads a day. He says the farmers must love Wm. McKinley. The manager of this factory is a Democrat but admits that the farmers did not have use for so much machinery when Grover was president.—Medalia Messenger.

The following was found posted in a public place in Colfax: "The politician is my shepherd. I shall not want during the campaign. He leadeth me into the saloon for my vote's sake. He filleth my pocket with cigars; my beer runneth over. Tho' I walk through the mud and rain and vote for him, and I shout myself hoarse, when he is elected straightway he forgetteth me. Yea, tho' I meet him in his own house he knoweth me not. Surely the wool has been pulled over my eyes all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the ranks of the old party forever.—Bloomington Pantagraph.

No atmosphere is so injurious to the hearer, and none so trying to the preacher, as petty criticisms and malicious interpretation. People ought to hear in a large and generous spirit, remembering that the preacher is a man of like frailties with themselves, and remembering that no man ought to be judged except on the length and breadth of his teaching. It is possible that one day he may be dull—it is a matter of the weather; it is possible another day that he may not be sweet-tempered—it is a matter of digestion; the hearers ought to make great allowances for one who has to work with the double instrument of a fickle mind and an imperfect body. Hearers should remember that no man ever can be equal except he travel on the plane of dreary commonplace.—Ian Maclaren in the May Ladies' Home Journal.

State Auditor R. C. Dunn has very positive views on all questions pertaining to politics and state affairs. The conditions necessary to Republican success in the next election are, in his opinion, as follows: "To win the election the next Republican candidate for governor must not depend upon a band wagon for his nomination, or the interposition of a divine providence for his election. It is all right to talk about an economical campaign, and the personal integrity of the candidate. We tried that; we had an economical campaign, and a candidate whose personal character was above reproach. But he did not get the votes. What was the matter? He had no organization worthy of the name, and the campaign work fell upon the shoulders of an earnest but undisciplined army without a general. The Republican party must get together, not only in the selection of a candidate, but in the making of an organization and the selection of a committee that will conduct an intelligent campaign addressed to the voters. And what is more, we must have a platform that pledges itself to something in the shape of legislation looking to the relief of the people.

RAILROAD FINANCIERING.

The Minneapolis Journal pays the following tribute to the railroading and financiering of the Great Northern magnate:

The claim is made by financial observers that James J. Hill is bringing about a revolution in railroad methods in this country, both as to plan of operation and as to methods of finance. Mr. Hill is not an imitator; he is a student. He thinks while he rides. When the train stops, he observes; when coal is taken on he holds the watch in his hand; if the time is two or three minutes, he estimates the time in coaling on a transcontinental trip and proceeds to invent a coal dump that will reduce this loss of time about two-thirds. Obstacles do not count with Mr. Hill; if he fails on one trial he retires gracefully and later, if his judgment so determines, he will take up the work again. He usually wins. This is why the railroad men of the country are watching his every movement closely.

The Great Northern stock is today worth 194 and its earning power warrants the price. The stock paid a good return all through the panic years when competing lines went to the wall in failure. The railroad managers have learned to look for new ideas from Mr. Hill and they have not been disappointed, for while other managers may be imitating, the Great Northern's president is inventing.

We have a recent instance of Mr. Hill's new ideas in railroading. The Great Northern is issuing $15,000,000 of new stock to pay for branch lines in the state of Washington and in British Columbia, which it desires as feeders, and also to buy $7,500,000 of the stock of the Eastern Minnesota, or rather to add the above amount of stock to the $5,000,000 of Eastern Minnesota now issued.

Instead of following the old lines of issuing bonds upon which interest must be paid, thus adding to the charges against the property, Mr. Hill offers this $15,000,000 to shareholders of the road at par. As the stock is worth 194 or thereabouts, the investor at par can make a handsome profit in disposing of the stock, while the road has the money it wants and proceeds to pay dividends on the new stock. Mr. Hill has made it his policy to keep the bonded indebtedness of the Great Northern road down to a minimum. Is it surprising that his ideas are awaited with interest? The Burlington has within a few days announced the sale of some of its stock on the par basis. It will not be long before roads generally will be offering rights to stockholders instead of going into the general market for loans.

Mr. Hill's first new idea that attracted attention was his large train load. It is a fact that when that method of making money came to public notice, his road was hauling 40 to 60 cars to the train load as against 20 on some of the competing lines. The northwest has given to the railroad world a true financier—a railroad manager who manages.

Betrothal Rings.

Modern Greek peasants exchange a gold and silver wedding ring, and they drink wine from the same cup. But the regular ritual of the Greek church ordains that solemn betrothal precedes the actual marriage, in which are used gold and silver wedding rings blessed by the priest, the gold ring being given to the man, the silver ring to the woman. The form of the espousal is then repeated, and the rings are placed on the right hands and then exchanged that no inferiority may be betokened by the woman wearing the silver ring and also to indicate a common ownership of property.

An Armenian mother usually chooses her daughter's husband. After all business preliminaries are settled between the families the bridegroom's mother, accompanied by a priest and two matrons, visits the bride and gives her a ring in token of espousal, and with this ring the couple are ultimately married. Among the fishing communities very ancient and elaborate rings are used, and they descend as heirlooms from generation to generation.

In Japanese marriages arranged between very young people the girl receives a ring in evidence that the union is binding. In Malabar an old native custom seats both bride and bridegroom on a dais, and a relative washes the feet of the bridegroom with milk and puts a silver ring on the great toe of the right foot. He then hands a gold ring to his kinsman, and a necklace and chaplet of flowers are put on the bride's neck and head.—London Mail

Korea's Seven Wonders.

The seven wonders of Korea are: (1) The marvelous mineral spring of Kinshanto, one dip in which is a sovereign cure for all the ills that human flesh is heir to. (2) The double springs which, though far apart, have a strange, mysterious affinity. According to Korean belief, there is a connection underground, through which water ebbs and flows like the waters of the ocean, in such a way that only one spring is full at a time. The water possesses a wonderful sweetening power, so that whatever is cooked therein becomes good and palatable. (3) The cold wind cavern, whence comes a never ceasing wind so piercing that nothing can withstand it and so powerful that the strongest man cannot face it. (4) The indestructible pine forest, the trees of which grow up again as fast as they are cut down. (5) The floating stone, a massive block that has no visible support, but, like Mohammed's coffin, remains suspended. (6) The warm stone, situated on the top of a hill and said to have the peculiarity of spreading warmth and heat all round it. (7) A drop of the sweat of Buddha, for 80 paces round which no flower or vegetation will grow, nor will birds or other living things pass over it.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Saint Norah and the Potato.

St. Norah was a poor girl, says the London Punch, who prayed St. Patrick for a good gift that would make her not proud but useful, and St. Patrick, out of his own head, taught her how to boil a potato. A sad thing and to be lamented, that the secret has come down to so few! Since the highest intellectual and physical life is dependent upon diet—since the cook makes, while the physician only mends—should not she who prepares our pies be as carefully trained as he who makes our pills?

Certainly whatever may be the knowledge or the ignorance of the servant in the kitchen, the mistress of the house, be she young or old, ought to be able, like St. Patrick in the fable, out of her own instructed head to teach Norah how to boil a potato or broil a steak so that they may yield their utmost of relish and nutriment.

Until she can do that, no woman is qualified to preside over a household, and since few reach adult life without being called to that position in the household of husband, father, or brother, the legend of St. Norah has a wide significance.—Youth's Companion.

CARE OF GLOVES.

How to Treat Them So as to Preserve Their Usefulness.

In the first place, it may be pointed out that rough handling is especially disastrous to kid gloves, and it very often happens that a new pair are split and ruined by jerking them on in a careless fashion. Always put on a new pair of kid gloves for the first time long enough before they are to be worn to allow of due deliberation in the task. When a pair of fine gloves are bought, the purchaser should insist that they be fitted on in the shop; then if there are any flaws they will be detected before the gloves are paid for and taken away.

Cheap gloves are generally risky investments, but some of the best shops keep a fairly good line of gloves at low prices which are worth buying for common wear. If strong and well made, they will serve for shopping and morning walks or for bad weather.

In putting on a glove be careful to get each finger straight. Coax each one on by rubbing gently with the thumb and first finger until the fingers are down to the very ends.

In taking the glove off turn the wrist over the fingers and take hold of the ends of the fingers through the wrist. It wears a glove out badly to pull it off by catching hold of the finger tips. Pull the glove into shape and lay aside carefully. Silk should be kept to match each shade, and gloves should be mended as soon as a break appears, for the old proverb, "A stitch in time saves nine," is especially appropriate to these articles of attire. Glove mending is delicate work, which requires both skill and dexterity, and when well done pays admirably for the pains taken. Glove powder should form one of the adjuncts to every toilet table, and a pretty glove stretcher is another.

Frenchwomen set a good example and have made quite an art of putting on gloves, and this is why a Parisienne's gloves last her four times as long as any one else's.

Buttoning gloves should never be done in a hurry. The wrist should be carefully and gently pulled straight and the buttons insinuated gently into the holes. Use a glove buttoner always. It ruins both the buttonholes and the finger tips to button them without

After purchasing a new pair of gloves always sew the buttons on before wearing them. The annoyance of having the buttons drop off will then be avoided.

How to Roast Loin of Mutton.

Rolled loin of mutton is a good joint and one that is easy to carve. Select a good lean loin, take off a little of the fat and remove the bones carefully with a sharp knife. See that none of the lean is taken off with the bones. Roll up tightly and tie the meat securely together with a broad tape, skewering it also. Pour a good brown gravy over and serve. Half a loin of mutton treated in this way makes a good roast for a very small party.

How to Devil Meat.

Prepare a mixture as follows: Put two tablespoonfuls of thick brown sauce into a basin, add a dessertspoonful of chutney paste, a teaspoonful of anchovy sauce, a teaspoonful of Worcester sauce, a quarter of a teaspoonful of made mustard, six drops of lemon juice (or three drops of vinegar) and a dust of curry powder. Cut some slices of any kind of cooked meat, and spread them evenly with the mixture, and put them into a cool place until the sauce has set, then lightly flour the prepared meat and dip into beaten egg and cover it thickly with bread crumbs, and after letting it stand for a short time fry it in clarified dripping.

How to Cook Bloaters.

Split the bloaters in two the entire length of the back, close them up and lay them in a saucepan with half milk and half cream sufficient to cover them. Boil them slowly until thoroughly done. Lift them from the saucepan, lay them on a hot platter, garnish with parsley and serve them with a separate sauce of cold thick cream.

How to Prepare Potato Cutlets.

These are easily prepared. Cut some cold potatoes which have been boiled and allowed to cool into rather thick slices and stamp them out with a cutter into the shape of small cutlets, or if more convenient they may be cooked in slices. Dip them into clarified dripping and then into browned bread crumbs which have been seasoned with salt and pepper and place them on a baking tin which has been well coated with beef dripping and bake in a hot oven until nicely browned.

How to Make Tapioca Jelly.

Into a double boiler put one cupful of tapioca and the same amount of water, boil until perfectly clear and then pour on a large platter. While still warm beat in a glass of currant or plum jelly. Serve with sweet cream and powdered sugar.

How to Make Domestic Honey.

This recipe for homemade or "domestic" honey once took the premium at an Ohio state fair: Gradually bring to a boil one quart of filtered rainwater and four pounds of "C" sugar, skim, boil about three minutes longer, then add one-fourth ounce of finely pulverized alum, remove from the fire and stir in one-half ounce of cream of tartar and one tablespoonful of best rosewater or extract of rose.

How to Prepare Beef Brisket.

Procure about three pounds of the best part of brisket of beef, place in a dish and well cover it with water, placing another dish over it after adding a little salt, pepper and two cloves. Simmer in the oven gently for about three hours. To be eaten cold.

How to Sweeten the Breath.

Dilute a little bromo chloralum with eight or ten parts of water and use as a gargle; swallow a few drops.

M'KINNON

The Crookston Man Slated for Wheat Inspector.

People throughout the northwest will be interested in the announcement that Alex McKinnon, of this city, is said to be slated to succeed A. C. Clausen as chief grain inspector of Minnesota. Assurance of this fact has been given by an official in the confidence of Gov. Lind.

Mr. McKinnon was originally to have the insurance commissionership, but that appointment was hung up, it is understood, through the influence of Michael Doran. Gov. Lind feels that Mr. McKinnon should be recognized by the administration, and for that reason, it is said, will make him grain inspector.

McKinnon has long been prominent in the councils of the Democratic party of the state. He has fought vigorously for the success of the party, and is recognized as a capital organizer. McKinnon was a candidate for state treasurer of the state with the present executive at the last election.—Crookston Times.

ELOPED

With Indian Attorney Will F. Campbell.

Will F. Campbell, the quarter blood Indian who resides at White Earth an is an attorney by profession, has eloped with a Washington lady. Campbell is quite well known here and was one of the party which accompanied Chief Moose Dung to Washington last winter. The following special to the St. Paul Dispatch explains the matter:

Washington, May 1.—William F. Campbell, of White Earth, Minn., and Mrs. Kate Burgess, a beautiful Southern woman, aged 28 years, have created something of a sensation. The couple have disappeared and detectives are now trying to locate them. Mrs. Burgess was to have been married today to Dr. J. Wilson Hope, of the National Soldiers' home, Hampton, Va. Dr. Hope is prostrated with grief and Mrs. Burgess' mother and sister are swearing vengeance on Campbell. Mrs. Burgess' mother is Mrs. Jesse Chilton, proprietor of the Indiana house in Washington.

It is said that Campbell met Burgess here last winter while stopping at the hotel with several White Earth Indians. At that time Mrs. Burgess had not procured a divorce from her husband, but after her attachment for Dr. Hope a divorce was obtained from Mr. Burgess. Her engagement to Dr. Hope was announced but this did not dismay Campbell in the least. He pressed his suit and Mrs. Chilton claims that he obtained undue influence over her daughter, Mrs. Burgess. Campbell and Mrs. Burgess have been missing since Saturday, and it is supposed they left here Saturday night for the Northwest.

Detective McDevitt is making all possible efforts to locate them. A sister of Mrs. Burgess named Mrs. Powell says she will pursue Campbell to the finish. She learned from a ticket broker that Campbell had purchased two tickets for White Earth. She learned further that he had removed two trunks from his last stopping place at 224 Third street northwest. One trunk had been checked to St. Paul, the other to Chicago.

She sought aid from Inspector Boardman, and he referred her to Detective Sam Browne, at the Pennsylvania Railroad station. The tickets which Campbell purchased were known to be over the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad. Mrs. Powell watched all who left Saturday, but without success.

Congressman Eddy, of Minnesota, was seen this afternoon and asked if he could throw any light on the case. He said: "I have supposed that Campbell and the lady with whom I have seen him many times were married. Instead of Campbell exerting great influence over her, it seemed to be the other way. She called him Will, and seemed to think a great deal of him. I was at the Indiana many times and saw them together more or less. I understand Campbell told Dr. Hall that he was going to marry Mrs. Burgess."

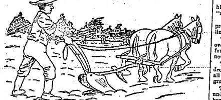
ST. PAUL, - MINN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. Jet is again much in favor among spring trimmings. When used on decollete waists, it is framed in white tulle.

The plain, tight sleeve is coming in, but the modistes are hesitating to leave off the becoming little caps which have been such an addition to the sleeves for some time.

There are indications that the plain or simply rolled collar will reign in the immediate future, and lace and chiffon ears and frills will be abolished from the nape of the neck.

Kid cloth is the name of a new fabric which looks not unlike the surface of a suede glove. It adapts itself admirably to the lines of the figure, an important requisite now, and is newer even than satin cloth.

Fine imported challies are more artistic in design and coloring than ever before and promise to rival foulard gowns. Like the new organdies, they show either very small or extremely large floral designs.

The difficulty in making an old gown into a fashionable one is chiefly in the length of the skirt, and one way to overcome this is to add a deep yoke of velvet, silk or lace over silk, whichever is most suitable for the material.

The ribbon makers are showing what they can do this spring, for their products have never been lovelier. Embroidered and painted ribbons are the latest wrinkle, and the shirred ribbons make very stylish trimmings for gowns of thin cotton material.—New York Sun.

SHORT SERMONS.

The best men are those who attend to their own business and never meddle with a neighbor's unless invited.—Exchange.

TO PREVENT EARACHE.

How to Remove Superfluous Wax. Great Care Necessary.

Few ailments are more common among children than earache, and mothers, though unconscious of the fact, are themselves the cause of much suffering from this painful malady in their children. In her anxiety to have the child's ear clean a mother will sometimes endeavor to remove every particle of ear wax from the inner portion of the ear, and to accomplish this to her own satisfaction will sometimes even use a hairpin covered with a towel or the towel itself twisted to a point.

The treatment is not only altogether too harsh, but it is unnecessary and harmful to remove all the wax. The membrane lining the canal of the ear contains a great number of little glands which secrete this waxy substance, and the purpose of this is to prevent the entrance of insects and keep the inner ear clean. The layers of wax dry in scales, which rapidly fall away and remove with them any particle of dust or other foreign matter which may have found entrance to the ear.

Be contented when you have made the child's ear clean outside and thoroughly dry and leave nature to attend to her affairs in her own way. In a case of earache nothing more irritating than a few drops of olive oil warmed to a temperature of blood heat should ever be placed in the ear. Nine-tenths of the earache of childhood and a large proportion of the deafness of old age is due to adenoid growths in the throat, which may be removed when one is young by a very slight operation.

Not a little danger is occasioned by children snuffing up accidentally or otherwise articles into the nose, where they get lodged and refuse to move one way or the other. The great danger is of the article remaining there so long before it is removed as to cause swelling and inflammation. The following will be found a very simple method of removing the article: Place a thin cloth over the child's mouth, and with your fingers close the nostril not containing the article. Next put your mouth close to the child's and give two or three strong puffs, and in nine cases out of ten the substance will fly out.

How to Make Corned Beef Pie.

Corned beef pie is a useful way of using up some boiled beef on a cold day. Take some cold corned beef, remove the skin and fat and chop it finely. Place in a basin and moisten with a little good gravy, a tablespoonful of tomato sauce and pepper and salt to taste. Place a layer of tomatoes at the bottom of a pie dish, then put in the meat. Cover the top with thin slices of pickled gherkins and lastly with mashed potato to the depth of an inch, scoring the potato across nicely.

How to Cook Hungarian Gulyas.

One pound of beef (from the shoulder or any juicy piece), cut into cubes. Put one tablespoonful of drippings into a saucepan and place over a good fire. When hot, throw in two finely sliced onions (about one pound), dredge with one-quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika and stir until the onions are thoroughly heated; then add the meat. When the meat is brown, push the saucepan to a part of the range where it will cook slowly and let stand until the meat is tender. Now add two medium sized potatoes cut into dice and two level teaspoonfuls of salt and cover closely. Do not add water, as the meat and onions should form sufficient gravy to cook the potatoes. When the potatoes are tender, dish on a hot platter, garnish with triangles of toast and serve very hot.

How to Make Cocoanut Pudding.

Butter three or four slices of bread, cut into small squares and place in layers in a buttered pudding dish, with grated cocoanut sprinkled between. Cover this with a raw custard in proportion of one egg, two heaping tablespoons of sugar and a few drops of vanilla to each cup of milk. Bake in a moderate oven. When there are two whites of eggs to spare, cover with a meringue.

How to Make Codfish Balls.

Pare six potatoes of medium size and cut in quarters. Put one cup of raw salt codfish, picked into some pieces, above the potatoes in the saucepan. Pour boiling water about them and cook until tender. Drain off the water and set the saucepan, covered with a cloth, on the back of the range to dry the potatoes. Mash thoroughly and add black pepper to taste. Beat an egg until white and yolk are well mixed, add gradually a little of the fishball mixture, and when well blended return to the saucepan and beat thoroughly. Shape into smooth balls, place in a frying basket, and fry in deep fat, smoking hot. Serve with a garnish of parsley.

How to Make Nut Entree.

Grind a pound of almonds with a handful of shelled peanuts, 1¼ pounds of granulated sugar and one-half ounce of ground cinnamon. Mix well and put over the fire until the mixture becomes crisp. Take from the oven, place over the top hard boiled eggs cut in strips and pour over all a tablespoonful of wine and sirup and serve. This is a delicious entree.

How to Make Mushroom Sandwiches.

Boil a small quantity of mushrooms and mix them thoroughly with finely minced beef tongue. Add French or other mustard as desired and spread between dainty slices of white bread. Never spread a sandwich quite to the edge, thus preventing the soiling of fingers, gloves or clothes.

How to Whiten the Hands.

Rub them well at night for three nights in succession with almond oil, and then cover them with as much fine chalk as they will take. You may treat the face likewise.

Sad Death.

Arno Mereen, superintendent of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company, was summoned to Minneapolis a week ago last Monday on account of the illness of his wife. From what we can learn it seems that Mrs. Mereen had opened with a pin, what proved to be nothing or less than a pimple on her cheek. Blood poison set in and with the best of medical aid her life could not be saved, and last Thursday she breathed her last. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss. Mr. Mereen has the sympathy of the entire community in his sad affliction.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

A DEBATE

That's What Rocksbury I. O. G. T. Want to Do.

The subordinate Lodge Breidabliks No. 28, I. O. G. T., at their meeting on the 16th day of April last decided to challange Rev. I. T. Aastad to a public debate upon different points regarding the Good Templar Order. A committee of five were appointed to have charge of the matter, and the following challenge has been forwarded to Mr. Aastad in registered letter as follows:

At a meeting held in the Scandinavian Ev. Lutheran church at St. Hilaire, Minn., on the 10th day of April, 1899, seven ministers of said church condemned the Independent order of Good Templars without giving members of said order an opportunity to be heard in defence of their own behalf; the ministers acting as prosecutors, witnesses, jurors and judges in the matter.

Now, therefore, we the undersigned, on behalf of Breidabliks No. 28, Independent order of Good Templars, do hereby challenge Rev. I. T. Aastad, of Thief River Falls, and his colleagues to meet us in a public debate on the following questions:

Is the Independent order of Good Templars a religious organization?

Does said order deny or reject Jesus Christ?

Is said order an enemy to the church?

Is the existance of said order contrary to the teaching of the word of God?

Has the order proven itself a successful medium to lesson the evils of intemperance?

We the undersigned grant Rev. I. T. Aastad the privilege of naming time and place for said debate as follows: The place not to be outside of Red Lake county and the time some day in the latter part of May or the first part of June this year.

For Judges of said debate each side shall chose three persons and the six persons so chosen shall chose three neutral persons.

Parlimentary rules to govern. If said Rev. Aastad fails to notify the undersigned of his choice of time and place within two weeks from date, the undersigned will proceed to name date and place for said debate.

The time for speaking will be equally divided and no speaker barred.

Dated at Rocksbury, this 30th day of April, 1899.

Respectfully submitted.

NEW TOWNSITE

Cranberry Association Decides to Plat a Townsite.

The members of the Northern Minnesota Cranberry Culture company met in Crookston last week at the office of Geo. A. Ralph, manager, and decided to plat a townsite on property owned by the company on the bank of Thief Lake.

This is done with the idea of centralizing the settlement that is being made up in the country north of Thief River Falls, where country stores, blacksmith shops, etc., are being put in at various places.

The company in developing its marsh will require considerable help, and this move will tend to get the settlement into shape to be self sustaining, and at the same time furnish such help. The name for the new village will be decided upon later. The usual consessions will be made in the way of free sites for churches and a school, and the location is in the line that an extention of the road may be expected to run when the development of the country in which this is an important step, shall demand such extention. Among the members of the company are President Lamberson and Secretary Powell and others from Warren.

He's Known Here.

A Fergus Falls dispatch to the Minneapolis Tribune says. "The heaviest failure that has thus far been recorded in the United States court of this city is that of Ray W. Jones, of Frazee, whose petition in bankruptcy, filed Saturday, places his liabilities at $200,165, assets, nothing. Mr. Jones has been interested in some large lumber deals in the vicinity of Thief River Falls, and has been in litigation with the Meehans, of that place, for some time past, Moose Dung, a thrifty redkins, having leased the land, on which a valuable water power is located, to the first mentioned parties several years ago and afterwards leased the same real estate to Mr. Jones."

Mr. Jones is secretary and treasurer of the Commonwealth Lumber Company, of Frazee.

Hard to Kill.

Last fall Robert Foster secured a turtle from the Pembina river and bringing it home deposited it for the time being in a swill barrel, which was half full. Before he got around to take it out the swill froze up solid, encasing Mr. Turtle. Robert made no effort to take it out, thinking it would be dead. This spring—just a few days ago—the barrel was turned on its side to allow its contents to melt, and one warm afternoon the turtle walked out and made its way sedately to the river, after having been encased for over five months in solid ice. Robert says he is willing to make affidavit to the truthfullness of this statement.—Bathgate (N. D.) Pink Paper.

The Trust of Trusts.

This is the age of trusts, and according to the Crookston Tribune that irrepressible attorney, N. Campbell, does not propose to be out done by any New Jersey concern. The Tribune says:

"Hon. N. Campbell was busy in his office today preparing articles of Incorporation for a Syndicate that has for its object nothing more nor less than the consolidation of all the farming industries of the world into one gigantic trust. Several London, Liverpool and Chicago parties are interested in its formation.

"The name of this unparalled enterprise will be "The World's Trust." Branch officers will be established in the leading countries on the globe. All persons owing land in fee, will be appraised by farmers near the land. The Trust proposes to handle and control all the provisions of any and all characters that grow from the soil as well as the cattle, horses, hogs, sheep, etc., including the shipping and manufacture and selling thereof.

"No one but the projectors of the scheme can obtain stock in the trust and its shares are not transferable, but descend from heir to heir, for all time. In case one dies leaving no heir at law, the stock reverts to the trust. Just what the outcome of this project will be, no one can reasonably fortell, but it would appear that it will not be very long before this trust will control the destinies of the world."

Fast as a Steamboat.

That C. A. Traverse and John Pederson are either mighty oarsmen or slight prevaricators is the opinion of all the people in this city. They claim to have left this city last Thursday morning at 11 o'clock and rowed in a boat up the Thief River to Mud Lake, crossed the lake and rowed up a small creek about four miles to the Sorum farm, arriving there at sundown Friday evening. The route by land is 48 miles and by water it was all of 75 miles. They were also obliged to row up stream all of the way and the current is rather swift in places.

Indians to Farm.

Capt. W. A. Mercer, of Walker, was in the city Tuesday and went up to the Red Lake Agency. Mr. Mercer is the Indian agent and the Red Lake reservation is under his jurisdiction. While here he made arrangements to meet the several families of Indians located near here on Sunday when he returns from the Red Lake. It is said that the Indians will all be furnished with oxen and farming implements.

His death is deeply mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. May he rest in peace.—Marshall County Banner.

A WAR SECRET.

The Emperor Napoleon was advancing against the allied forces of Austria and Russia in 1805 and uncertain just where his enemies were. It was on the afternoon of Dec. 1 that Napoleon, who was sitting alone in the house he had appropriated as his headquarters, received an unexpected visit from Marshal Bernadotte—he who afterward became king of Sweden.

"Sire," said the marshal, "we have captured an Austrian spy. He has been found guilty and is to be shot forthwith. Is it your majesty's will that the sentence be carried out?"

The emperor reflected a moment and then replied, "No; bring him to me."

The marshal reappeared with the prisoner, who was accompanied by a strong guard. Napoleon commanded them all to retire, even the marshal.

"So," he said, raising his cold, keen eyes to the man's face, "you are a spy."

"No, I am no spy, monsieur general. I am a traveler."

The emperor started. The prisoner had answered him in English.

"Diable! You have the impertinence to call me 'monsieur general'—I, the emperor! Who and what are you?"

"I am an Englishman, and in our country we do not call you emperor. We call you General Bonaparte. Sometimes we call you by other names."

"You affirm that you are a traveler and no spy; that you are an Englishman and no Austrian. From whence have you come today?"

"From Austerlitz."

"From Austerlitz? Where is that?"

"It is a village about 14 English miles from here eastward on the road to Preran."

The emperor again consulted his map.

"I cannot find it here," he said. "Show me where it is."

The prisoner bent over, placed his finger on the sheet and replied, "It is there."

"Ah! I see. What did you see there?"

"Sire!" exclaimed the Englishman, "though I hate you and would destroy you if I could, I cannot lie to you. Olmutz is the headquarters of the allies, and they are encamped there, on the frozen marshes, 80,000 strong!"

The features of the emperor turned from flesh to stone.

"If indeed you are telling the truth, your life shall be spared; if not"—

The Englishman smiled. "I am not used to be bribed," he said. "What I have told you I have told freely. You may do with me as you will."

The brilliant young marshal—for he had only just turned his forty-first year—could hardly repress his astonishment when the emperor said to him:

"Marshal, keep close guard of your prisoner. I suspend the execution of his sentence till the day after tomorrow. Yes, till the day after tomorrow."

* * * * * * * *

The right of the French army, under the command of Marshal Davoust, rested on the left bank of the river Zwittawa, in the direction of Proban. It held the nearest point to the Austro-Russian lines.

Hurriedly inditing a dispatch to Davoust, announcing his intention of forthwith retiring toward Bohemia, as the enemy were in overwhelming strength ahead, and enjoining the strictest secrecy, Napoleon intrusted it to an officer whose loyalty he had reason to doubt, bidding him to cross the Zwittawa at the nearest ford and make a detour to the northeast, so as to acquaint himself with the nature of the country in that quarter.

But the officer never reached Davoust. He fell into the hands of the Austrians at Boskawitz.

At sundown, as was his wont, the emperor rode throughout the whole field on which his army lay, saying to his soldiers as he passed, "Mes enfants, the enemy are in front of us, outnumbering us by tens of thousands. Prepare, then; for a long march to the west! Yes, prepare at once! It is not a retreat, but a precaution. And, remember, not a word of this to any one, for spies are among us, and if the enemy should get to know"—

At midnight the emperor summoned his marshals. From the first it was obvious that they were in a state of the utmost consternation. Soult, Bernadotte, Murat, Davoust, Lannes, Oudinot, Bessieres—all declared the emperor mad.

"Your secret!" exclaimed Murat, who alone dared address his sovereign thus. "It is already known throughout Moravia! And as for retreating, it is infamous!"

"Then be it so," said Napoleon. And now he proceeded to give instructions which, as they were unfolded, filled his faithful marshals—who only a moment ago were doubtful of their sovereign's sanity—with admiration and enthusiasm.

Daybreak saw the whole French army massed in battle array—by one of those swift, miraculous movements of concentration which were the despair of Napoleon's enemies—on the plain which that day was to make memorable for all time.

The allies, drawn out of their safe encampment under the guns of Olmutz, found themselves face to face with an attack which all their generalship and all their bravery and all their superiority of numbers could not resist.

As night came on the courage even of despair broke down within them. Austrians and Russians fell by tens of thousands before the onslaught of the victorious French. Some of them even tried to escape across the frozen lake of Satschan, but Napoleon, prepared for this as for all else, pounded the ice with his artillery and broke it into fragments, so that about 2,000 of the enemy perished miserably in the water.

"Bring in your prisoner—the spy," said Napoleon to Bernadotte next morning at his headquarters in the palace of the Prince of Kaunitz-Reisberg.

"Son of the perfidious Albion," he exclaimed as the Englishman entered the apartment, "here is a safe permit for you through all the countries that acknowledge the flag of France. I give you also—for you may need it—$1,000, and my thanks. Adieu."

"I understand your majesty's secret now!" cried Bernadotte. "It was"—

"A 'secret de Polichinelle,'" said the emperor.—London News.

Our Girls' Chances to Wed.

Professor D. R. McAnally, in The Ladies' Home Journal, has a most interesting article on "The American Girl's Chances of Marriage." In a carefully compiled paper he shows how age affects the American girl's chances, how they are affected by business conditions and war, in which states her chances are best, in which worst, the influence of education on matrimony, marriages in the country, etc. This writer asserts that the American girl's chances of securing a husband are considerably better than the European girl's, for the reason that there are but 965 women to every 1,000 men in the United States, while in the countries of the old world there are more women than men.

A PROBLEM SOLVED.

They sat idly on the deck of the Atlantic liner. The moon was rising. It was evening in June, and they were nearing the banks. Even there in midocean the setting sun had so warmed the air that they could lounge at their ease in the long wicker deck chairs and discuss a knotty point in moral philosophy of the domestic relations.

"For my part," Mainie Whitmore remarked, drawing her little woolen wrap somewhat closer around her ears, "I say a woman's first duty is to her husband."

"And for my part," Arthur answered, leaning across toward his wife, "I say a woman's first duty is to her children."

"How do you make that out, Whitmore?" the major inquired lazily. The major had a pretty knack of his own in casuistry.

"Why, it runs through all nature," Arthur Whitmore replied. "It belongs to the very essence of feelings engendered in us by natural selection. The male fights always for the female and the young, the female fights for the young only or turns tail to protect them, leaving the male to defend himself."

"I remember," the major mused, "I was out tiger hunting in a nullah in India, and I came across a tiger, with the tigress and cubs lying hid in the jungle. I fired at the brute and he leaped straight up at me, but the tigress and her cubs slunk away through the long, tall reeds of the canebrake. Well, I killed that tiger and went after the tigress, but when I got her at bay she fought like a regular devil for her cubs, I can tell you. So there's your case, Whitmore."

"Yes, it must always be so," Arthur Whitmore continued. "The male, as the more active and stronger of the two, must fight for the female and the young together. The female, as the weaker, yet the protector of the young, must leave the male to look after himself, and, at all risks to him, just take care of the little ones. They are the hope of the race, the future of the species. The sire has had his day. If he sacrifices his life for his young, no great harm can come of it. But the little ones have all the world before them. For their sake the mother must run no needless risk. Her first duty is to them. She has borne them and suckled them. To sacrifice them to the father would be unnatural and harmful, and in the wildest sense unfeminine."

"That's all very well for the beasts," Mainie answered petulantly, "but we are not beasts, and I say with us a woman's first duty is always to her husband. Fold up my chair before you come below, Arthur. I'll run down and see how Charlie and the baby are getting on in the stateroom."

"It opens up an interesting moral question," said the chaplain, as Mainie disappeared with a nod down the companion ladder. "It seems to me you make things rather rough for the husband, don't you?"

"Well, no," Arthur answered. "I look at it like this: Parents bestow much love on their children, and the love they receive in return rarely requites them. It is repaid by the children to the next generation, as the father and mother themselves repay the debt they incurred to their own parents. It's the same with the father. The love he lavishes on the woman of his choice is repaid by her in part to himself, in part as care on her side for the children, who are, after all, his children. I don't see how a race could well be kept up otherwise. The man must love first his wife, then his children. The woman must love her children best of all, and repay the surplus of her love to her husband."

"Let's have a cigar," the major said, with a yawn. "We're growing quite sentimental."

They smoked and went below. In half an hour all was still, save on the bridge, where the officer of the watch paced up and down and peered before him in the dark; for fog was forming.

Fog on the banks at night is a terrible thing to the experienced seaman.

About 2 in the morning every soul on board was awakened by a terrific crash that jarred horribly through the ship as she came to a sudden standstill. Her iron plates clanked. Her timbers creaked and shivered. She had run into an iceberg.

In a second the electric light had gone out, and all was darkness. Too terrified for screams, men, women and children groped their way through the long corridors and up the companion ladder. On deck a few dim lights made the gloom just visible. The sea was rushing into the forward compartments; leaks had sprung in the after ones; the fires were out; tons of ice cumbered the quarter deck; the forecastle had disappeared with the violence of the collision.

Still all on board was order. The captain, wounded by the falling ice, gave the word of command as clear and steady as ever. Sailors were lowering the boats; the second officer, revolver in hand, was holding at bay the half naked stokers, who had surged up from their noisome hole at the earliest alarm and were trying to seize the first boat for themselves.

One boat was ready. Arthur Whitmore stood on the deck, holding his wife's hand tenderly. Mainie pressed the two children tightly against her bosom.

"Women and children forward!" the captain called out in his clear, calm voice.

With a wild sob and a fierce embrace Mainie clung to her husband. "Arthur, Arthur!" she cried, trembling. "Won't they let you go with us?"

"No, darling!" Arthur answered, kissing wife and little ones. "This boat is for women and children only."

"Then I must go with the children," Mainie sobbed, breaking forward.

They took their seats on the thwarts and were pushed off into the dark deep. After three days at sea in the open boat they reached Cape Race. But Arthur went down on the sinking steamer.

He was justified, after all. Instinct had solved the problem aright for Mainie.—Grant Allen in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Fantastic Fables.

A public treasury, feeling two arms lifting out its contents, exclaimed, "Mr. Shareman, I move for a division!"

"You seem to know something about parliamentary terms of speech," said the two arms.

"Yes," replied the public treasury, "I am familiar with the hauls of legislation."

An inoffensive person, walking in a public place, was assaulted by a stranger with a club and severely beaten.

When the stranger with a club was brought to trial, the complainant said to the judge:

"I do not know why I was assaulted. I have not an enemy in the world."

"That," said the defendant, "is why I struck him."

"Let the prisoner be discharged," said the judge. "A man who has no enemies has no friends. The courts are not for such."—"Fantastic Fables" by Ambrose Bierce.

The following dates which give the time that seeding has been begun on one of the big farms in the Red River valley during the past thirteen years show that there have been more backward springs than this and yet the harvest time has never failed: 1887, April 7; 1888, April 14; 1889, March 25; 1890, April 7; 1891, April 7; 1892, April 18; 1893, May 2; 1894, April 23; 1895, April 1; 1896, May 4; 1897, April 19; 1898, April 8; 1899, April 19.

Here is a hint from the Pipestone Daily Star: "A government internal stamp collector was in the city on Saturday and he told Clerk of Court Smith that he must not record a minister's certificate of marriage unless a 10-cent revenue stamp had been attached and cancelled by the pastor who had performed the ceremony." The pastors of the country will do well to take note of this fact and hereafter see that the necessary stamp is affixed to all such certificates.

TIRED OF RAIN

And Attempted to Kill Himself.

The wet weather of last week caused many people to feel downhearted, and the report comes from Tweet that Andrew Mosestade, a well-to-do farmer living northwest of there, became so despondent that he attempted to suicide. He cut three ugly gashes in his throat with a razor, but was stopped before he could further mutilate his wind pipe and Dr. Blomburg, of St. Hilaire, was summoned. The man is now doing nicely and will recover.

Mosestade has a granary well filled with wheat and rain has been leaking through the roof upon it, and that is attributed as the cause of his going temporarily insane. He is said to have a good farm, well stocked and in very comfortable circumstances.

STOLEN

That Is the Opinion of Many People.

A valuable mare belonging to Peter Wilmes is either lost, strayed or stolen. The animal was taken out with the heard belonging to Henry Goenen on Tuesday morning and has not been seen since, although a diligent search throughout the country has been made. It is suspected that the animal was stolen, as it was not in the habit of straying off alone. The description of the mare is as follows: Five year old; color, bay; with white stripe in forehead and three white legs; weight about 1,200 pounds; of Clyde stock and chubby built. The mare was in good condition.

It's All Right.

County Commissioner Hansen on Tuesday had ex-Sheriff Norland examine the bridge across the Red Lake river at this point to ascertain whether or not it would be strong enough to hold the boilers for the new saw mill which will have to be taken across it. Mr. Norland is an expert at the business and he pronounced the bridge strong enough to hold 100 tons.

THE FANS

They Organized Last Saturday Evening.

A number of base ball enthusiastics met at Jackson & Bailey's hardware store last Saturday evening and organized a base ball club. C. C. Jackson was elected manager; L. P. Strannhan, secretary, and Sam Bardelson treasurer. Just who will be the players in the club this season has not as yet been decided upon. There is a large amount of new material, and the prospects are that Thief River Falls will have one of the best clubs in this section. The St. Hilaire ball players also organized last week and prospects are that a game will be played at an early date.

Red Lake Falls Regulars.

Monday three well known Red Lake Falls boys, Victor E. Patnaude, Wm. I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

How to Recurl Feathers.

The simplest way to recurl feathers is to shake them before a clear fire and then with a paper knife or the blunt side of a penknife coax them to their original form, treating each tendril separately. Another way is to dampen the feathers and curl them round waving pins, leaving them for 24 hours, then loosen the waves by the gentle application of a comb.

How to Barbecue Fish.

Have some fish, nicely flaked, free from skin and bone, laid in a pie dish; in a marinade of a tablespoonful each of oil and vinegar, a slice of onion, a dash of coralline pepper and salt to taste to the pound of fish. Leave this on the sideboard covered with a buttered paper. When required, put into the dish three tablespoonfuls each of tomato catchup, sherry or Marsala and butter, allowing these all to melt together, putting in the butter first. When they are all well blended, lay in the fish and keep it well basted with the sauce till it is thoroughly hot, then dust with a little coralline pepper and minced parsley and serve.

How to Make Rice Salad.

One cupful of cold boiled beets cut very small. Toss it with a cupful of cold rice boiled so that the grains are dry and distinct. Heap this on lettuce leaves and garnish with minced celery and gherkins (mixed). Over the whole pour half a cupful of mayonnaise, rather thin and sharp, with a few drops of lime juice and highly spiced with cayenne.

How to Cook Fillet of Beef.

Cut a good fillet of beef into slices 1¼ inches thick. Brush each slice with melted butter. Then cut white paper in large heart shaped pieces; fold in center lengthwise. Put a slice in each paper and fold edges together. Place in a baking pan and cook in a hot oven about 15 minutes. Serve in papers, having first opened paper. Put a tablespoonful of horse radish sauce on each and pass the remaining quantity in sauce boat.

How to Make Raisin Fritters.

Cook the raisins, then seed and chop up. Beat up four eggs and add a pinch of flour and the raisins. Mix well and fry in hot lard. Take from the fire and heap up with sirup, a little orange flower water, a few spoonfuls of preserves and roasted sesame seed. Serve very hot.

TO LINE A SKIRT.

How to Cut the Material and Put In Haircloth.

The silk lining for a skirt is cut in the same shape and size as the outer material, unless you wish a drop skirt, when the lining and outer skirt are finished separately, making practically two skirts mounted on one waistband. If you want to make it in the former manner, then the gores are cut alike, both silk and material, the same as you would any other lining, and sewed up. You can either bind each seam, after pressing it open, or strap it with a bias fold of silk, taking care that the stitches do not go through to the dress goods and that only the lining is caught.

Interline a skirt so that the haircloth is from six to eight inches wide, according to the length of the skirt. If the latter is 40 inches long, the haircloth must be fully eight inches wide or it will break across the ankles as you walk. If the skirt is longer, then the interlining must be ten inches wide. In putting haircloth in the skirt after seaming up the lining and pressing open the seams, lay the haircloth over (the wrong side), cutting it crosswise, lap each width of the haircloth and bind each edge with a bias piece of the lining; stitch the lapped parts together and also stitch the upper edge of the haircloth to the lining after facing it—that is, the edge with a bias strip of the lining. The lower edge is basted to the lining and also outside and cut like the outside material, an inch longer than the wearing length. This is turned up and caught down to the lining when the binding is applied. Never cut the lower part too short to turn up the haircloth. It will not make a thick seam, as it should be pressed down after the first stitching on of the binding.

If you wish a drop skirt, then, as the above tells you, have the haircloth on the silk lining and cover or face with a thin lining. If you do not wish to have lining and skirt separate, then sew the haircloth in the seams with the lining and dress goods, cutting it crosswise, laying it between the two materials, after binding the upper edge with a bias piece of lining, and then bind each seam with bias pieces of the lining after pressing each open.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

How to Relieve Choking.

Raising the left arm as high as you can will relieve choking much more rapidly than by being thumped in the back. Very frequently at mealtime and when they are at play children get choked while eating, and the customary manner of relieving them is to slap them sharply in the back. The effect of this is to set the obstruction free, so that it can be swallowed. The same thing can be brought about by raising the left hand of the child as high as possible, and the relief comes much more rapidly.

How to Prepare Lamb Cutlets.

Cut a loin of lamb into chops. Remove all the fat, trim them, scrape the bones and lay them in a deep dish. Cover with salad oil and let them remain an hour. Mix together finely grated bread crumbs, a little minced parsley, pepper, salt and some grated nutmeg. Having drained the cutlets from the oil, cover them with the mixture and broil them over a bed of hot, live coals, on a previously heated gridiron, the bars of which have been rubbed with chalk. The cutlets must be thoroughly cooked and turned often. Have ready some boiled potatoes, mashed smoothly and stiff with cream or butter. Heap the mashed potato high on a heated dish, shape it like a dome and smooth with a spoon, and around its base stand the cutlets and on the point place a bunch of curled parsley.

How to Remove Mud Spots.

In the first place, when returned from a muddy street, hang the skirt before a fire, but not too close, so that the mud may dry quickly. When dry, the mud spots should be loosened by rubbing with the edge of a penny, and the dust should then be gently brushed off with a brush of moderate firmness. If after this brushing the mud marks are still visible, sponge the spots with alcohol or methylated spirits.

How to Handle China.

Good china that has gilding upon it should not be rubbed, as it is liable to remove the tracery. It only requires to be rinsed in warm water, then in cold. It should be left to drain dry. Very occasionally rub this china gently with a little finely powdered whiting and a soft wash leather. Good dessert plates, tea plates and saucers should be put away in the china cupboard, protected by circles of paper placed between each. This preserves the glaze or painting from scratches. It should be noted that the china cupboard is thoroughly dry, as dampness soon tarnishes the gilding on fine china or crockery.

How to Prevent Pneumonia.

Take a hot bath and put on warm clothing. Wrap your head and throat with woolen cloths and place a mustard plaster upon your chest. Then hold your head over a hot stove and inhale the hot air. Remain indoors 48 hours, always having your room at a high temperature and free from a draft. At the end of that time the cold will have disappeared.

How to Get to West Point.

Apply to the congressman from your district. Each member of the house of representatives has the appointment of one cadet. This appointment is usually made by a competitive examination. A further examination, both physical and mental, is required upon admission.

How to Roast Beef Heart.

Wash the heart thoroughly in salt and water; then wipe it dry. Cut off the flaps and fill the cavities with forcemeat. Tie round securely with greased paper and roast in the oven for about two hours. Baste constantly. Serve with gravy and red currant jelly.

TO FARM

Government to Set the Indians Up in Business.

Capt. W. A. Mercer, who now has charge of the Indians on the Red Lake reservation with headquarters at Walker, Minn., paid a visit to the wards of the government in this section last week. The government will spend considerable money in an endeavor to make better citizens out of the Indians and Mr. Mercer was here with a view of ascertaining their wants. A saw mill will be built on the shores of the Red Lake near the Agency and lumber manufactured for the Indians with which they can build homes. A flour mill will be erected also at the Agency which will be used to grind up the flour used by the Indians. The most money, however, will be expended in a large boarding school, which will cost when completed about $35,000, and will be large enough to accommodate all of the young Indians of the reservation.

The supplies for the Agency will in the future be shipped to Thief River Falls and from here will be taken to the Agency in steamboats. The government will build one steamboat which will run exclusively from here to the Agency and another one will be built to do the business on the lake.

Mr. Mercer stated that the Indians in this section will be put to farming and an effort will be made to make respectable citizens out of them. A sub-station bill be started at Highlanding, several miles north of this city, on the Red Lake river, which will be in charge of an experienced white farmer who will have charge over the Indians. Farming implements and oxen will be purchased and the Indians can have free use of the same, but they will not be allowed to sell them. Work will be commenced at once and a crop will be put in this year.

Capt. Mercer states that in the future the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor to the Indians will not be tolerated. A number of policemen will be put on duty at different points on the Red Lake reservation and any violator of the law will be punished.

INDIANS WON

Their Claim to Sections 16 and 36 Held Good.

The long-looked for decision of the secretary of the interior on the claim of the state of Minnesota to Sections 16 and 36 on ceded Indian reservation was promulgated by Secretary Hitchcock last week.

The contention of the state through the state auditor and through the written statements from Senators Davis and Nelson was that Section 16 and 36 were never intended as part of the Indian reservation in Minnesota; that by virtue of constitutional provisions the state is entitled to these sections for school land purposes, and that these sections, therefore, remained unceded portions of the reservations, until the act of 1889, known as Nelson act, was passed and the Indians relinquished their lands under condition that the proceeds of the sale would be set aside as a trust fund for them.

Secretary Hitchcock holds that under existing treaties with the Indians and under the congressional enactment of 1862 the United States is under obligation to the Indians who relinquished these and other lands of the reservation under the terms of the Nelson act. It is further claimed by the department that at the time the treaty was first made, the lands were unsurveyed and that the state could have no legal claim to them; also that there were precedents showing that the government is bound to keep inviolate its stipulations under their provisions of treaties with the Indians.

The decision will not settle the controversy. A test case is now being prepared and will be brought in the courts. The claim of the state rests on the general proposition that a certain amount of land in each surveyed or unsurveyed township was intended, and in fact set aside for educational purposes. It was a part of the public policy of the government to carry this out. And Sections 16 and 36 never actually passed into the possession of the Indians. The lands claimed are worth in the neighborhood of two million dollars.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Judge D. B. Searle, of St. Cloud, commander of the department of the Minnesota G. A. R., has promulgated the following order as to Decoration Day:

"Of all the days of the year the 30th day of May—known as Memorial day—is most sacred to the memory of the nations dead. Amidst the business cares and turmoils of life it is a pleasant thing to know that so many millions of our people, all over this land, yearly observe this day. Let it be ever thus observed, for it has become one of the institutions of the republic, and we should teach its observance to the young and rising generation as we do the celebrated Fourth of July.

"The Woman's Relief Corps, the G. A. R., the Ladies' Aid Society, the schools, the churches and all patriotic orders and other kindred organizations should be requested and are requested to come with beautiful flowers and evergreens and participate in such memorial service and render the homage due patriots who died for their country and mankind.

"These memorial services are not had to excite any sectional feeling between the old soldiers of the North and South, but rather to exhibit to the world in the daring of the Union and the Confederate soldiers alike, the bravery and patriotism of the American people, fighting for the right as they saw it. Times have practically healed the enmities of that cruel Civil war, and all hatreds, the bitterness and sectional jealousies engendered by that great struggle of '61 to '65, have forever passed from the patriotic American heart.

"Memorial day this year has a new element in it. While we strew flowers upon the graves of our dead comrades of the Civil war, let us not forget the brave boys who went down with the Maine, as well as all those young heroes of 1898, who offered up their lives freely upon the alter of patriotism that the Spanish nation might be taught lessons of justice and mercy. All these boys have done their duty nobly, and hundreds have died bravely upon battlefields.

"All flags should be displayed at half-mast.

"All posts are requested, if practicable, to attend divine service on the Sunday preceeding Memorial day.

"All churches are requested to have suitable memorial services on the Sunday preceeding Memorial day whether there be any G. A. R. post in attendance or not.

"The last regular session in our public schools before Memorial Sunday will be devoted to patriotic service. All comrades will be welcome to these services and they are requested to attend the same dressed in the Grand Army uniform whenever practicable.

"By resolution the thirteenth national encampment recommended that the reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg address be made a special feature of the Memorial day exercises held under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic."

The News is indebted to Senator O. H. Myran for the legislative manual.

The supreme court last week handed down a decision in which it holds that a homestead is not exempt from an execution on a judgment from labor and material used in building a house on the homestead.

The Chicago Record last week printed a picture of Congressman Eddy. It showed the Seventh district congressman to have his hair combed, his necktie on straight and his coat buttoned up. There must have been some mistake.

How to Make Cough Mixture.

Place in a jar six ounces of molasses, seven ounces of honey and ten ounces of vinegar. Set the jar in a saucepan of boiling water and stir till all the ingredients are mixed and warmed through. Then add three drams of ipecacuanha wine and bottle for use. The dose should be a tablespoonful every four hours.

How to Make Chestnut Soup.

Peel and scrape the nuts, boil them in water with salt and pepper to taste till quite soft. Strain them, and when the moisture has dried off press them through a sieve. Put the puree into a saucepan containing a large sliced onion previously browned in butter or cottolene till tender. Add the necessary amount of water, remembering that the mixture when finished must not be too thick, and serve with toast fried crisp in cottolene and cut in dice. If desired, port stock and part water can be used.

How to Select Cabbages.

Cabbages are somewhat similar to lettuce in their form of growth. A good head is indicated by abundant leaves, long and curved over the center. If the leaves are meager, there is trouble at the heart.

How to Make China Cement.

A durable cement is made by burning oyster shells and pulverizing the lime from them very fine, then mixing with the white of an egg to a thick paste and applying to china or glass and securing the pieces together until dry. When dry, it will take a long soaking for it to become soft again. Common lime will also do, but is not as good. Either should be freshly burned and only mixed when needed, as when once dry it cannot be softened.

How to Grill Salt Pork.

Cut 10 or 12 very thin slices of nicely streaked side pork. Toast over a hot fire, dipping frequently into cold water. When well cooked, set in the oven for two or three minutes and serve very hot.

The Northwest Indian and His Ways.

The Indian of the plains is a far more picturesque individual than his brother or cousin of the coast. He does not erect totem poles and has no timber for the purpose if so inclined, but he is sufficiently spectacular himself without resorting to grotesque carvings and painted wood. His saddle, with its leather hangings and wooden stirrups, is in itself a remarkable aggregation, and when set off with his goods and chattels tied in bags, rags, strings and straps, the effect is remarkable. He wears the cast off garments of his white brother in such original combinations that he looks like the personification of a secondhand store. Sometimes the adoption of a pair of guernseys as an external covering gives him quite an athletic appearance. He wears his hair in Gertrude braids, and prefers earrings about the size of half dollar coins. A mosquito net or handkerchief is his favorite head covering, and if he assumes a hat it is as an additional and purely ornamental appendage.

A LASSIE'S PRAYER.

In a well known saloon on Champlain street, not far from the busy part of Ontario street, where many well known men about town often are found as visitors, a remarkable scene was witnessed the other day, on account of which a group of men present on the occasion will long hold a vivid remembrance of the time and place.

The persons interested most intimately in the scene were of a remarkably-varied sort. The barkeeper and a small bootblack were minor yet interesting characters, but of principal importance were four middle aged men of the well to do and sporty class, and a slender, sweet faced young girl wearing the familiar blue costume and bonnet of the Salvation Army.

One of the group was a prosperous physician, a man of middle age, eloquent address and pleasant bearing. His speech bespoke an excellent education. A second member of the group was a business man. The others were a middle aged man, who was educated for the ministry, now a successful man of affairs, and the fourth and least commendable a man with a family, who had, until recently, lived on the narrow profits of a none too extensive business, but had fallen heir to the sum of $10,000, which he was blowing in as rapidly as he and his friends could get away with it.

This was the group to which the bartender was passing frequent drinks, and by the side of which the little bootblack was busily plying his brushes over the surface of a pair of boots. It was an idle, uninteresting scene thus far, suggesting little that was commendable, except an abundance of unstilted good fellowship, for the intellectual standard of the men was not apparent in the loud talk and laughter poured out in torrents over the glasses.

It wanted only the appearance of the pretty Salvation Army girl to work a magic change. In the midst of a hoarsely shouted jest at the bartender one of the men was suddenly hushed by his companions. Pounding a massive fist with a thundering blow upon the table and swinging his hat he began to ridicule the young man wearing the beer stained white apron.

"The barkeeper has an honest face," he shouted, with a roar of laughter. "An honest bartender, boys, ha, ha, ha!" And he nearly rolled from his chair, when he was suddenly bade to "shut up." The summons was obeyed at once.

"There's a lady here," said one of the men, and the laughter ceased and the revelers looked toward the door.

In the center of the barroom floor stood the slender form of a Salvation lassie. Two dark eyes were looking timidly at the group of boisterous men, as though wondering whether it was safe for a young girl to approach nearer. Her arms clasped a bundle of War Crys, and her fingers moved nervously as she peered at the group about the table.

There was a dead silence in the room and the embarrassment seemed mutual. The girl stared at the group of men, and the men stared at her. Every hat was removed, and some of the men quietly leaned an elbow on the table to conceal the glasses. After a moment's pause the girl noticed the marks of respect being paid her presence, and her timidity gave way. Approaching the nearest of the men she handed him a paper with the request to buy.

The sound of the voice was marvelously sweet and musical for such a place. Every face about the table looked its wonderment. A noticeable trace of something like conscious guilt appeared as the girl looked from one countenance to another.

The man who had been solicited to buy drew forth from his pocket a handful of money and selected a large silver coin, which he placed in the outstretched palm of the girl and received in return a smile and sweetly spoken "Thank you." The others likewise went into their pockets and paid her liberally for her papers. She then turned to go, but one of the group, the one formerly intended for the ministry, whom his companions had so suddenly hushed at the appearance of the girl, found his tongue again and addressed her. He was respectful, but as yet by no means sober.

"You came in here to do good," he said to her, standing with uncovered head, "and you must not go away without making some impression upon these drunkards. I need some one to make me better, and I demand that you make an impression on me before you leave."

Thereupon, to the great amazement of the young woman, he began to take off his coat. He threw it upon the table and turned to his companions, all of whom had remained as solemn and silent as tombstones, and addressed them in eloquent tones, beseeching them to behave themselves till the young lady spoke.

The dark eyes of the young girl looked a thousand doubts and fears, and it was apparent that the situation was a trying one. She had spoken to many a sinner, but not under such circumstances. Seeing, however, that the men were not jesting she plucked up her courage and bravely stood her ground. The little bootblack had discontinued his work of polishing shoes and stood gazing at her. The four men, not drunk, nor yet sober, waited for her to speak. The bartender leaned over the bar and scowled. She looked at him and he guessed her meaning and shouted savagely:

"'None of that, now, miss. You've sold your papers, so get out.'

A hundred devils would have been more welcome, but his remonstrances were of no avail, as he was quickly silenced by the men around the table, who told him not to meddle with their affairs. Before he could growl anything in reply the brave young girl had seized the occasion and, despite his orders, dropped upon her knees on the stone floor and lifted her hands to pray. The men likewise knelt down, and the bootblack looked into the upturned face of the girl and bowed his uncovered head.

The bartender turned away in anger, but after a moment dropped his head also as the sweet voice of the kneeling girl asked heaven to bless him.

When the girl had finished there was not a dry eye in the room. Even the bartender shook the girl's slender hand when she left, and the four men declared the day was not wholly lost in which they could meet such a woman.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Closed Down

The saw mill at St. Hilaire was closed down the greater part of last week owing to the fact that the supply of logs had given out. It started up again Monday and the gang and band saws will be run the rest of the season. It is understood that the mill will not run nights this summer.

He was compelled to lay over, and hunted up the friend of his earlier years. Although Mr. Walsh hadn't seen him for 31 years, and had no idea he was in the city, when the men met it was "hello Bill" and "hello, Ed." without a moment's hesitation, or need of an introduction.—Crookston Times, May 11.

A White City

A novel town will soon be started on the banks of Cass Lake, a few miles north of Akely. It will be situated on the banks of the lake, at a spot especially endowed by nature, and will consist of several hundred tents. It is the idea of the proprietor to rent the tents to tourists and others, and meals for all can be secured at a large eating house, now being erected. The town will be known as "The White City," and it is expected that it will become famous as a health resort and as a place for those seeking rest and recreation. In the fall the tents will be taken down, and each succeeding summer will be set up again. A number of gentlemen from this city are already planning on spending a few weeks there this summer.

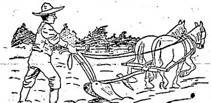
ST. PAUL, - MINN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

A LASS' HEART.

Every farmer for miles around had been invited to the wedding of Mary Delane, and tonight the auspicious event was to take place.

The match between Mary Delane and Shaun Brady had been brought about and perfected by Pat Mulcahy, a renowned matchmaker. Mary was an exceptionally pretty girl and as good as she was pretty. Shaun Brady was twice her age, possessing an unenviable name and many enemies; but, as John Delane remarked, "a moneyed man has many jealous friends," and money Shaun had in plenty. That covered all deficiencies, moral and physical, in John Delane's eyes.

Mary Delane had no love for Shaun Brady. She well knew that her life would be in many ways a hard one, but she had been badgered by her father until she had said "yes" with a heavy heart.

She received the guests as they came, standing proudly beside her father, her face white as marble.

Her thoughts were wandering far and wide when a voice aroused her and sent the blood to her cheeks.

"God save all here!"

"God save you kindly, Dan," she heard the company respond in unison, and then Dan Reardon was shaking the hand which she mechanically outstretched.

In a moment he had gone, mingling among the guests.

"More power to ye," he said to the fiddler as that worthy man finished.

"An shure," answered Tom, "it's having the loikes of a fine bouchal like yourself beside me that gives me the power."

Dan joined in the general laugh.

"It's about time the groom and his riverence were here," said Mary's uncle.

"Oh, they'll be here directly now!" said John Delane. "Shure she'll be taken from me soon enough."

Dan Reardon sat by the porch door, gazing abstractedly into the darkness outside. Mary watched him from her place beside her father, and as that good man arose in answer to a servant's call she slipped quietly over to where Dan was.

"A penny for your thoughts, Dan," said she.

"They're priceless, miss," said he, "for I was just thinking of the wan I love best in this dreary, bitter world."

"If I'm not too bold, Dan, I'll be after axin you who she is, an its anxious I am to know."

"Och, shure, Miss Mary," he stammered, "you'd be the last one I'd tell. Don't ax me no more; shure it's only folly on my side."

"Well, thin, Dan, you can tell me whether she is dark or fair."

"Well, I'll say this much, miss, that to me she's the fairest girl in Kerry."

"Give me her initials, thin," coaxed Mary, "an maybe I can guess."

"Arrah, now, don't say no more about it!"

"But you must tell me," she insisted. "I'll not let you alone until you do."

"Well, thin, since you're so determined I'll take the consequences an tell you. Her name is"—here he waited for a moment—"Mary Delane."

Mary blushed like a wild rose and stammered:

"Oh, Dan, shure you can't mane me!"

Dan looked her full in the face as he said quietly:

"It's you I mane, Mary, but don't be angry. Shure I thought I'd cut my tongue out before I'd tell you, but you dhrove me to it. Oh, dear, oh, dear, an on your weddin night too! Don't mind me, miss. I'll not trouble you in any way again, but call God's blessings down on you this night, an my constant prayer will be for your happiness."

"An do you think I could be happy with Shaun Brady?" asked Mary, with an upward glance.

"Well, I hope you'll be," he answered evasively.

"An what's the good hoping any such thing when you know well, as I do, that happiness and I will part forever when I marry Shaun? I have been forced into it an shall try to do my duty; it's too late now to turn back."

"No, Mary," he said, "it is not too late. If you care for me or think that in time you could give me your precious love, I say again that it's not too late."

"Oh, Dan, shure you forget that I'm to be married this night! His riverence and Shaun are expected any minute."

"I'm not forgettin the fact; an it's a short time you have to decide. We'll run away, an go straight to Father Duffy's an be married, an wid you at my side to give me courage I'll work my fingers off to give you comfort."

Then Mary, with lovelit eyes (oh, so different from the downcast Mary of an hour ago!) and blushing cheeks, consented.

"I'll go wid you, Dan. My heart you possess, an you might as well have me wid it. Go round to my bedroom window. I'll drop my mantle out, an you must wait by the old fort. I'll follow as soon as I can without raisin suspicion."

Two weeks from that memorable night the runaways returned and were welcomed heartily to the village. The old man grew white with anger when he saw the culprits before him.

"Away wid ye! You beggar—you thief of the night—you come here and stand forninst me, wid brazen impidence after stealin the apple of my eye, my only child! Away wid ye!"

"All right, sir," said Dan, his head thrown back, "we'll go. Come on, acushla! but I'd have you know, sir, that I'm no beggar. I'm well able to make a livin for my wife, an I'll do it with God's help."

The old housekeeper came into the parlor a short time after and was much surprised to see Mary sitting close beside her father, Dan in the best chair the house afforded and all three as contented as they could be.

"Shure it isn't an hour ago," she told the dairy maid, "since John Delane said wid his own lips, 'I'd not forgive thim, Mrs. McCarthy, not if they wint down on their binded knees!' An now look at 'em!"—Exchange.

The Music She Plays.

There are worse ways of choosing a wife, says a musician, than by the music she plays and the way she plays it.

If a girl manifests a predilection for Strauss, she is frivolous; for Beethoven, she is impractical; for Liszt, she is too ambitious; for Verdi, she is sentimental; for Offenbach, she is giddy; for Gounod, she is lackadaisical; for Gottschalk, she is superficial; for Mozart, she is prudish; for Flotow, she is commonplace; for Wagner, she is idiotic.

The girl who hammers away at "Maiden's Prayer," "Anvil Chorus" and "Silvery Waves" may be depended upon as a good cook and healthful. But, last of all, pin thou thy faith upon the calico dress of the girl who can play "Home, Sweet Home."

A MUMMY NECKLACE.

The mummy necklace was a quaint, rough thing, more quaint than beautiful, yet with a certain picturesqueness and an undeniable fascination, alternate beads of cornelian and gold and two tiny hearts hanging from the three central beads.

My father gave it me one day, knowing I had a fancy for these out of the way jewels. I do not know its history, but was told it had been taken off the neck of a mummy.

From the moment it was given me its curious fascination overcame me. I wore it day and night. I fancied it would bring me luck. I certainly felt tiny soft pinches on my neck made by the beads. This I wondered at for a time, but afterward grew too accustomed to them to wonder. There were curious marks on the beads. They were chipped off or indented. Here and there were dark stains.

From the moment I began to wear the necklace my health failed. I grew weaker and weaker and at last fell seriously ill. Naturally I did not dream of connecting my illness in any way with the influence of my mummy necklace. On the contrary, I clung to it more and more, believing it to be a talisman.

I was lying on my sofa one day when a friend, who had observed my necklace then for the first time, said: "Why do you wear that? It isn't pretty. Let me look at it."

She held it a moment and shivered.

"Oh, it's a horrible thing! Don't wear it. It will bring you dreadful ill luck... I believe those are the marks of teeth and the stains of blood!"

I said: "It bewitches me. I can't bear to part with it, and I wear it day and night."

Another friend of mine took a dislike to it. She was a believer in magic of all sorts and was persuaded that the necklace had made me ill and was preventing my recovery.

"Yes," she said, "it has an influence—that I believe—but for evil."

At last she persuaded me to let her take it to a clairvoyant. A certain cobbler in a suburb of London was the clairvoyant we chose. He and I had had strange experiences some time before this, but, as Rudyard Kipling says, "that is another story."

I parted with the necklace reluctantly. My friend promised to arrange an interview with the cobbler the next day, if possible.

That night I fastened my pearl necklace on, missing the feeling of the mummy chain.

I lay awake all night... I was not allowed a sleeping draft, and I had coughed till I was exhausted, but not sleepy.

Towards dawn my nurse shut the door between her room and mine. I remember observing the light coming through the empty keyhole of her door and each side of my dark blinds.

The rain beat loudly on the windows. I lay listening to the weary sound.

Suddenly my wrist was seized and violently shaken. The bangles I wore, hung with talismans, rattled and jingled together. Another moment and my throat was seized by tightly clutching, strong hands.

I said to myself: "This is death, and it is terrible."

Still the clutch tightened. My pearl necklace was shaken. Even then I thought. "The pearls will be scattered." Then the thought came swift and horrible:

"He has come for his necklace." (He.) The next flash of thought was: "This is a struggle of thousands of years ago being re-enacted. Death is terrible. If only I could call for help! If only I could speak!" But the fingers clutched my throat too tightly.

And then I opened my eyes and saw a great gray formless thing. It lay stretched out on my bed, and through it I saw the light shining through the empty keyhole.

Even then, through my terror, I thought: "Shall I be believed when I tell them tomorrow? Yes, it must be true, because I hear the rain beating on the window pane all the time."

And all the time the clutching and the struggling never ceased upon my throat. I seemed to be so near to death that struggling on my part was useless. It was at that supreme moment I realized most distinctly the horror of the great, gray, transparent thing. All my soul went out into a cry for help to some one stronger than the thing, and then it moved, it lifted, melted away into a gray mist—disappeared.

Then I sat up in bed, lit a candle, which I never dared put out again, observed the hour by my watch—between 4 and 5—and lay back, stricken, exhausted, trembling, longing for something human to come and draw up the blinds and let in even the wet, dismal daylight rather than lie alone with the memory of my midnight horror.

Two days after this my friend, who had taken the necklace to the clairvoyant, came, bringing it back with her in a sealed envelope, begging me not to touch it.

She gave me an account of her interview before I told her my experience.

The clairvoyant in his trance had become unusually excited when she placed the necklace in his hands. He paced about the room, then flung himself on the floor, saying: "Dying, dying! I see autumn leaves everywhere. That is death. Oh, tell her never to touch it again! It is an accursed thing. It belonged to an Egyptian king thousands of years ago. Blood and warfare followed his footsteps. He wore it. It has never been on a woman's neck before. He knew she wore it, and when he missed it from her neck he was angry. He wants his necklace again. She must not wear it. It will be death to her. But even now she may be saved if she never wears it or even touches it again."

I left off wearing that necklace and finally parted with it, for ill luck was my lot as long as it was in my possession.

That is the true story of the mummy necklace as far as I am concerned. I have never seen my terrible visitor again. Will he come again some day and ask what I have done with his necklace?—Arabella Romilly in Lady's Realm.

Washington's Spring.

The first thing that greets the eyes of a stranger alighting from the train at Cold Spring, a village resting snugly in the highlands of the Hudson, is Washington's spring, inclosed by three bowlders in the rough, which, as one approaches, are seen to contain a tiny pool of spouting water.

An inscription in relief upon the bronze plate announces that "General George Washington, in frequent visits to the American troops encamped near by during the war of the Revolution, drank of this spring and gave it its name, Cold spring."

The encampments referred to were principally upon the famous Constitution island, just below, to which was attached one end of the great chain which was stretched across the river to West Point, and checked navigation by the British warships during the Revolution.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

William A. Jones, of the department of Indian affairs, makes the statement that a full blooded Indian lunatic is something unknown. There are, however, he states, a number of mixed breeds that are insane.

Several Polk county tax payers have filed with Auditor Gleason an appeal from the action of the board of county commissioners for reimbursing several Crookston citizens for expenses which they incurred in going to St. Paul last winter and helping to defeat the Red Lake county bill. They saved Polk county about $50,000, but their work is evidently not appreciated.

When Gov. Lind is able to satisfactorily explain why he refused to approve of the bill to have testimony taken before the railroad and warehouse commission admitted in court, he will have removed one of the principal among the many barriers in his path toward a second term. People cannot understand why they must continue to try cases, twice over; it not only delays the adjustment of matters in dispute but is a costly procedure as well. The legislature did not get a chance to pass the bill over the governor's veto, for the governor did not give them the opportunity he was probably aware they would promptly seize, so he killed the measure by withholding his approval.—Morris Sun.

Rural free delivery is receiving a good deal of attention at the hands of the postal authorities at present. A recent dispatch from Washington Says: "The success of rural free delivery in the sparsely settled sections in the West is highly satisfactory to the officials of the postoffice department. This method of delivering mail to the farming population is not only approved by those served, but from reports received at the department it is said to be preferred to the fourth-class postoffices. It is probable that in many portions of the country the small postoffice will be supplanted by the rural free delivery service, which will mean a great saving to the government. The mounted carrier can cover a large area of country, thus diminishing the necessity for many small postoffices which are maintained in a great many cases at an expense considerably in excess of the receipts of such offices. The farmer is also saved the inconvenience of making a special trip to the office for his mail. The policy of the department in discounting the small postoffice wherever practicable, and supplanting them with rural free delivery will hardly be approved by the proprietor of that time honored institution, the country store."

GOV. LIND'S ERRORS.

Some weeks ago a Republican newspaper in Minneapolis contained an article in which it made a feeble attempt to excuse Gov. Lind for some of his blunders. It was widely copied by the fusion press because it came from "a Republican source." These same papers that made so much out of that article are invited to copy an editorial which recently appeared in the always Democratic Minneapolis Times under the caption "The Governor of Minnesota." The Times says:

"Great hopes were entertained, when Hon. John Lind was inaugurated governor of Minnesota, that the state was to have an administration in which common sense would be preferred to partisanship, patriotism, to politics and the good of the people as a whole to the advancement of a comparative few. Some of Governor Lind's early appointments were distinctly disappointing. There was too much of the element of payment for benefits conferred and benefits hoped for, nor was the record of some of the appointees of a kind to commend them to public favor. However, the difficulties of conducting a campaign without making promises was recognized and the executive was given the somewhat doubtful compliment 'Maybe he could not help it.'

"There has been some difficulty in deciding exactly as to what party Mr. Lind belongs—whether he is an ultra Democrat or a hybrid Populist. This question does not particularily enterest The Times any more than it does to know that in his political career the governor has, tentatively at least, been a member of all the prominent divisions politics recognizes as national in scope. It almost seemed as if his experience in so many political camps might be of use to Mr. Lind in teaching him the value of independence on all questions affecting the people as a whole. It may have been an iridescent dream, yet many had it—the hope that the new executive would care less whether a measure was partisan and more whether it was right.

"There is not the least desire to be captious. In all efforts looking toward real reform, along needed lines of administrative capacity, Governor Lind has had the support of The Times and will have it to the end of his term. In two especial particulars he has been in error. First as to the Minnesota troops in the Phillipines. Had he done as did the Governor of Montana and declined to ask the withdrawal of the state volunteers from the fighting line, he would have done more than any other man could do to remove an undeserved stigma placed by the East and South upon as gallant a regiment as ever fought battles and won victories. He might have insisted that he was not in sympathy with the government's policy in the East—that would have been well within his rights; but to give color, even by implication, to the idea that our soldiers wanted to retreat under fire was a grave mistake. The gravity thereof is likely to be borne in upon all who assisted in making it, when the troops return.

"Again, in recommending the employment of convict labor on public works another decided error was committed. Doubtless Mr. Lind recognizes the truth of this already. There are some alleged economies far more to be deprecated than real extravagancies. The interests of the skilled and unskilled workingmen of Minnesota are incomparably above questions of saving a few dollars or a few thousand of dollars.

"Let no one go off at score and say, "The Times is inimical to John Lind." That would be as unjust as it would be untrue. This paper sincerely hopes that the governor will close his administration with the admiration and respect of every good citizen, and as his term is not one-quarter expended, sees no reason why he may not attain that desirable consummation. Mr. Lind will find that the best "band-wagon" is that from which issue the melodies of non-partisan patriotism. The present governor can probably be renominated by the Democratic party. If he hopes for re-election he must not commit many errors similar to those above referred to."

A PROBLEM SOLVED.

They sat idly on the deck of the Atlantic liner. The moon was rising. It was evening in June, and they were nearing the banks. Even there in midocean the setting sun had so warmed the air that they could lounge at their ease in the long wicker deck chairs and discuss a knotty point in moral philosophy of the domestic relations.

"For my part," Maimie Whitmore remarked, drawing her little woolen wrap somewhat closer around her ears, "I say a woman's first duty is to her husband."

"And for my part," Arthur answered, leaning across toward his wife, "I say a woman's first duty is to her children."

"How do you make that out, Whitmore?" the major inquired lazily. The major had a pretty knack of his own in casuistry.

"Why, it runs through all nature," Arthur Whitmore replied. "It belongs to the very essence of feelings engendered in us by natural selection. The male fights always for the female and the young, the female fights for the young only or turns tail to protect them, leaving the male to defend himself."

"I remember," the major mused, "I was out tiger hunting in a nullah in India, and I came across a tiger, with the tigress and cubs lying hid in the jungle. I fired at the brute and he leaped straight up at me, but the tigress and her cubs slunk away through the long, tall reeds of the canebrake. Well, I killed that tiger and went after the tigress, but when I got her at bay she fought like a regular devil for her cubs, I can tell you. So there's your case, Whitmore."

"Yes, it must always be so," Arthur Whitmore continued. "The male, as the more active and stronger of the two, must fight for the female and the young together. The female, as the weaker, yet the protector of the young, must leave the male to look after himself, and, at all risks to him, just take care of the little ones. They are the hope of the race, the future of the species. The sire has had his day. If he sacrifices his life for his young, no great harm can come of it. But the little ones have all the world before them. For their sake the mother must run no needless risk. Her first duty is to them. She has borne them and suckled them. To sacrifice them to the father would be unnatural and harmful, and in the wildest sense unfeminine."

"That's all very well for the beasts," Maimie answered petulantly, "but we are not beasts, and I say with us a woman's first duty is always to her husband. Fold up my chair before you come below, Arthur. I'll run down and see how Charlie and the baby are getting on in the stateroom."

"It opens up an interesting moral question," said the chaplain, as Maimie disappeared with a nod down the companion ladder. "It seems to me you make things rather rough for the husband, don't you?"

"Well, no," Arthur answered. "I look at it like this: Parents bestow much love on their children, and the love they receive in return rarely requites them. It is repaid by the children to the next generation, as the father and mother themselves repay the debt they incurred to their own parents. It's the same with the father. The love he lavishes on the woman of his choice is repaid by her in part to himself, in part as care on her side for the children, who are, after all, his children. I don't see how a race could well be kept up otherwise. The man must love first his wife, then his children. The woman must love her children best of all, and repay the surplus of her love to her husband."

"Let's have a cigar," the major said, with a yawn. "We're growing quite sentimental."

They smoked and went below. In half an hour all was still, save on the bridge, where the officer of the watch paced up and down and peered before him in the dark; for fog was forming.

Fog on the banks at night is a terrible thing to the experienced seaman.

About 2 in the morning every soul on board was awakened by a terrific crash that jarred horribly through the ship as she came to a sudden standstill. Her iron plates clanked. Her timbers creaked and shivered. She had run into an iceberg.

In a second the electric light had gone out, and all was darkness. Too terrified for screams, men, women and children groped their way through the long corridors and up the companion ladder. On deck a few dim lights made the gloom just visible. The sea was rushing into the forward compartments; leaks had sprung in the after ones; the fires were out; tons of ice cumbered the quarter deck; the forecastle had disappeared with the violence of the collision.

Still all on board was order. The captain, wounded by the falling ice, gave the word of command as clear and steady as ever. Sailors were lowering the boats; the second officer, revolver in hand, was holding at bay the half naked stokers, who had surged up from their noisome hole at the earliest alarm and were trying to seize the first boat for themselves.

One boat was ready. Arthur Whitmore stood on the deck, holding his wife's hand tenderly. Maimie pressed the two children tightly against her bosom.

"Women and children forward!" the captain called out in his clear, calm voice.

With a wild sob and a fierce embrace Maimie clung to her husband. "Arthur, Arthur!" she cried, trembling. "Won't they let you go with us?"

"No, darling," Arthur answered, kissing wife and little ones. "This boat is for women and children only."

"Then I must go with the children," Maimie sobbed, breaking forward.

They took their seats on the thwarts and were pushed off into the dark deep. After three days at sea in the open boat they reached Cape Race. But Arthur went down on the sinking steamer.

He was justified, after all. Instinct had solved the problem aright for Maimie.—Grant Allen in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Fantastic Fables.

A public treasury, feeling two arms lifting out its contents, exclaimed, "Mr. Shareman, I move for a division!"

"You seem to know something about parliamentary terms of speech," said the two arms.

"Yes," replied the public treasury, "I am familiar with the hauls of legislation."

An inoffensive person, walking in a public place, was assaulted by a stranger with a club and severely beaten.

When the stranger with a club was brought to trial, the complainant said to the judge:

"I do not know why I was assaulted. I have not an enemy in the world."

"That," said the defendant, "is why I struck him."

"Let the prisoner be discharged," said the judge. "A man who has no enemies has no friends. The courts are not for such."—"Fantastic Fables" by Ambrose Bierce.

Taxes on real estate must be paid prior to the end of this month or a penalty of ten per cent. will attach. This is a matter that is too frequently put off until the last day of the month, and then in the rush of other business is forgotten, or crowded out. The law requires of the county treasurer a strict compliance with these rules, and does not permit him to hold the matter open one minute beyond the last day of the month. A lenient provision has been incorporated into the tax laws in recent years, however, which allows the payment of half the amount, the remainder to be paid November 1st, without penalty on the half that is deferred. This is a convenience that has been appreciated and taken advantage of by many.

Here is a little story that illustrates the hard work of the primary teacher, besides there is a chance to laugh if you see where the laugh comes in. One of our pretty schoolmarms who teaches a few miles out of town was using all her ingenuity in teaching an apparently dull little fellow to spell and pronounce simple words. She wrote the word "feet" on the blackboard, but Johnny could not pronounce it, although he could name the letters. With her most coaxing smile she said: "Now, Johnny, what is it a cow has four of while I have only two?" The answer was prompt though unexpected and the smile faded from her face, only to be multiplied on the faces of sundry wicked little fellows who were not in the class.—Jackson Republican.

A "HOSS" THIEF

He Gets the Best of a St. Hilaire Farmer.

A. G. Ness, one of the well-to-do farmers living a short distance of St. Hilaire, was the victim of misplaced confidence last week. He rented his farm and stock to a stranger this spring and the latter attempted to remove with five horses and a wagon full of other machinery last Friday. He succeeded in getting a few miles west of St. Hilaire, where the roads are almost impassable, and was obliged to camp for the night in a grove. Four of the horses and the wagon were discovered in the morning by the authorities, but the remaining horse and man can not be found. *All of the neighbor*ing towns have been telegraphed to and the man will probably be captured.

An Interesting Lecture.

Dr. Forbes, of Duluth, presiding elder in this district, delivered an interestin lecture on the "Mistakes of the Devil and Some Other People," to a small sized audience in the Methodist church Tuesday evening. The lecture was a very interesting one and Mr. Forbes did full justice to his task, although the audience was small. A business meeting was held after the lecture had been delivered and the request was made that a resident minister be in charge of the work at Thief River Falls. The matter has not yet been fully decided upon.

Ole Hegland Dead.

Ole Hegland, the aged father of Mrs. Charles Olson, of this city, died Sunday in Crookston at the home of his daughter, Mrs. P. J. Russel, at the advanced age of 72 years. The remains were taken to this city Tuesday and buried in Greenwood cemetery.

A New Firm.

John Sande on Tuesday purchased of John Durnin the latter's interest in the livery and sale stable business of Durnin & Turville. Mr. Sande is a popular young man and will undoubtedly do well in connection with Mr. Turville.

THE FOURTH

Fire Department to Have Charge of the Celebration.

No arrangements have been made for the celebration of the Fourth of July in this city as yet, but it will probably devolve upon the Fire Department to furnish a suitable programme for the day. At their meeting to be held next Wednesday evening the matter will be discussed and committees will probably be appointed. If the firemen decide to take hold of the matter—and all of the citizens sincerely hope this will be the case—a good celebration will be insured. The members are all active and nothing is left undone when in their care.

A Ladies' Party.

Mrs. F. J. Stebbins entertained a number of friends at cards last Thursday afternoon. Cinch was played and Mrs. C. L. Dobner was awarded the head prize and Mrs. Wm. Benzie the foot prize. Those present were: Mesdames Hanson, Mullarky, Nicholson, Sirrine, P. Meehan, James Meehan, Dobner, Lewin, Benzie, Borry, Johnson, Francis, Knox, Jackson, Grundy and Eastman.

ST. PAUL, - MINN.

I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

RIDING FOR LOVE.

Fury holds me dumb. I stare at her out of murderous eyes. At last, "He never said it!" I gasp out.

"Never a word. I made it all up. I thought—believed—that he— No, that isn't true either. He never gave me any reason. But I couldn't witness your happiness. So I told you—those lies!"

No answer. I feel that speech will choke me. The atmosphere is a-throb with her excited pleading.

"Forgive me! I deserve your anger and —his scorn. But I've confessed. There's no harm done. Oh, what is the matter? It's not as bad as all that!"

"It's as bad as it can be. We've parted. I've written him a letter—a hateful letter. He'll never forgive me. And I don't want him to!"

"But he can't have got it yet."

Her words fall on unheeding ears. "I can never face him again—never! Oh, go away! Leave me!"

"Listen, listen! It's not three hours since I told you. It had to be written and posted. It can't have reached. Go to him —at once. Stop it, prevent his reading it. Now—now—don't waste time!"

She shook me wildly in her excitement.

"How? I should never be in time."

"You can ride like the wind!"

"Ride!" At the very word dead hope throbs to life again. Would it be possible? Is there still a chance? At any rate, it's worth trying, and anything would be better than this frenzied inaction. "The machine's in there. Pump my tires up while I put my hat on. How my hands shake! Now, quick, my gloves."

"Come; it's ready!"

I spring into the saddle and am off. "If I succeed, I'll forgive you," I shout back, and "Succeed, succeed!" follows me and spurs me on. Men have ofttimes ridden for their lives. Life? What is life to me today? I ride for love. If I lose—well, may I lose both life and love together! Kensington High street is busy, but I squirm in and out of the traffic without a pause and reach the open road of Kensington Gore, where I fairly let fly.

Shouts and remonstrances follow me unheeded. The first block occurs at Albert Gate, where the main traffic is crossed by carriages pouring into the park. I shoot past the constable's back, dive beneath the heads of a pair of prancing grays, circle round others and pursue my flying course to Hyde Park corner.

Another stoppage! Fury, despair! This time the policeman faces me. I catch his eye. Mine implores humanity. He winks a kindly "All right, missy, on you go."

Alas, not for long! The stream of traffic pouring out of Park lane into Piccadilly shuts out all hope from my desperate gaze. I crawl up, jerk my front wheel round to an angle of 45 and come to a standstill without dismounting. But all hope is over. Nothing can avail me now. The letter has reached—been read. My doom is sealed!

The restraining arm of the law is withdrawn. We are let loose. Piccadilly lies sweltering beneath slimy pools. Those fiends of water carts have been disgorging themselves liberally, rendering dangerous for man and beast roads that would otherwise have been in perfect condition.

Ordinarily I should have threaded my way daintily over the islands of this greasy morass. Now I simply splash on, spurting the mud to right and left, saving myself almost inevitable side slips by gripping my handle bars and jerking them up at the least suspicion of a slither. I lift my front wheel and actually jump over the worst of the slimy pitfalls.

St. James' and then Jermyn street save me delay at the circus. Waterloo place—Pall Mall—dashing down Suffolk street—an empty landau—meeting it from Trafalgar square a groom on a mettlesome young mare. I am close on them, but they must have passed each other in time to leave me room. Neither observes the other; both keep to the middle of the road. Result, collision. The most lightninglike of dismounts would simply dash me into the melee. To steer aside is equally impossible. In a flash I realize my only course.

"Hold up, my man!" I shout to the horseman on my right. He and the coachman tumble to the situation instantaneously. Both positively drag their horses off the ground, and three pairs of fore legs paw the air above my head and form a living triumphal arch, 'neath which I shoot. Defrauded, the jaws of death snap to behind me in the clash with which they all reach earth. My heart leaps into my mouth and chokes me—a mist swims before my eyes. I sway in the saddle and almost fall.

The Strand reached, my impotence maddens me. Crowds of horses, men, vehicles —I scarce know what—surround me and hem me in on every side. In a blind frenzy of haste a path betwixt the narrow lines of traffic, barely conscious of the shouts, warnings, oaths and execrations that pursue me. The same mad course down Fleet street!

Rarely if ever do I ring my bell, but steer in and out, avoiding every impediment in my path as if by magic. I see the surging life around me as Christian saw temptations—merely as obstacles to be overcome. Now my destination is in sight, and a flying leap from my machine, while still at full pace, lands me at the very door. Flinging my mount into the hands of an astounded onlooker I tear up stairs.

Thank heaven, he's out!

"I'll go in and wait."

"Very well, miss. In here, please."

Is that my letter lying on the top of an unopened pile? Ah, surely!

A voice outside—his voice!

"My little woman, how dear of you to come. But what—what?"

I release my hands, totter past him, snatch the letter from the desk and wave it wildly above my head.

"Jim, I wrote it. I don't want you to read it. I—I"— Sobs choke my utterance.

Smiling, he takes it from my trembling fingers. I sink down and watch him helplessly with terror fascinated eyes. The torn tiny fragments flutter slowly from his fingers into the official waste paper basket. I have a dim sense of strong, dear arms supporting me as I close my eyes to shut out the view of walls and furniture, which will sway to and fro in the most bewildering manner imaginable.—Chicago Herald.

Gems That Fade.

A ruby which had been left for two years in a light show window was found to be considerably lighter in hue after this time had elapsed than a stone previously of exactly the same color which had been kept in the dark. Similar results were observed with emeralds and sapphires. Still more rapid is the action of light on the less expensive stones. Garnets and topaz differ in that the former becomes dim and dull, while the latter only turns lighter. The opal "turns sick," to use a professional expression, on short notice at times.

Teaching Tricks to New Yorkers.

Mrs. James Lorillard Kernochan, now that Mrs. Paran Stevens is gone, furnishes the New York smart set with its ideas. Like Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Kernochan, who was Miss Lorillard before her marriage and who is one of the wealthiest dowagers, has a candid and witty tongue, and the stupid conventionalities in nowise disturb or repress her original genius. Next after Mrs. Astor she gives the most sumptuous dinners of the season. Her banquets are conducted on the English plan, with a liveried footman to nearly every chair and a show of massive gold plate that cannot be rivaled in any other house in America.

Unlike Mrs. Astor, though, this hostess originates dinner fashions. It was she who this winter first served small perfumed napkins with different courses, who adopted tabourets in place of the usual high backed chairs and inaugurated the custom of sweeping away finger bowls and passing in their place a large silver basin of water, into which guests were invited to dip their fingers and dry them on a small bunch of lemon verbena laid beside each dessert plate. Her enterprise in search of novelties is untiring.—New York Letter.

A Legacy Goes Begging.

They are telling a rather unusual story about an attempt to force a legacy on the trustees of the Hillhouse High school in New Haven.

William Kinne, the first principal of the school, died a short time ago in a quiet Massachusetts town, whither he had gone after his retirement as a schoolteacher. In his will Mr. Kinne left a legacy of $500 to the school, the income of which was to be used for the purchase of dictionaries to be given as prizes to scholars in his school who should excel in spelling 100 words taken from the constitution of the United States. The old teacher's expressed object was to induce a study of the constitution as well as correctness in spelling.

When the executors of the will tried to dispose of the legacy, the members of the board of education found that they, as the trustees of the school, could not accept the trust. So here is at least one instance of a legacy going begging, and it will have to continue to do so unless some special legislation to enable the board to accept the trust is enacted.—New York Times.

To Save Sinking Ships.

Among the inventions which had a practical trial during our war with Spain was a French device for stopping shot holes, called the Colomes stopper. One of these was employed to close a rent made by a shell in the battleship Iowa. The hole was about a foot above the water line. As soon as the stopper was inserted the inflow of water, which had begun to flood the deck, ceased. The stopper consists of a rod having at one end an iron plate, pivoted at the center so that it can be folded backward along the rod.

To stop a leak the rod carrying the plate is first thrust outward through the hole. Then a turn of the rod causes the plate, which is weighted at one end, to become parallel to the side of the ship, and in this position it is drawn back by the rod, so as more or less completely to cover the hole. Next a cellulose cushion is placed upon the rod, and by the aid of a nut forced tightly against the inner side of the ship over the hole, so as entirely to stop the leak. Stoppers of various sizes are carried to suit the size of the hole that may have to be dealt with.

A Famous Mathematician.

A literary and scientific club of women is to be organized in Milan in honor of Maria Gaetana Agnesi, the centenary of whose death will occur in August. At an early age she was credited with speaking Italian, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, German and Spanish. At 19 she published a philosophical treatise and then devoted herself to sciences, mathematics being her favorite study. She stated that algebra and geometry were the only regions of thought in which peace reigned supreme. Pope Benedict XIV appointed her professor of mathematics at the University of Bologna, and she died at the good old age of 81.

Two Great Counties.

"There are two counties in Washington," says Senator Wilson of that state, "each nearly as large as the state of Massachusetts, and one of them is as great a goldfield as South Africa. The camp of the Republic mine will be a city of 10,000 inhabitants in a year and a half. In this wonderful county there are mountains full of gold and back of the mountains are magnificent agricultural lands. Washington is the place for making money now."

Objected to Vaccination.

People with conscientious objections to vaccination are now allowed to expose their children to smallpox in England.

The argument of a recent objector in the Marylebone police court was that "if God Almighty thought that vaccination was necessary or even desirable he would have performed the operation before the child was born."

Vestadium.

A new aluminium alloy, called vestadium, is credited with remarkable properties. It is claimed to weigh only a third as much as aluminium of the same bulk and to be the strongest of the light metals and the most readily used. It is, moreover, rustless, resists sulphuric acid, takes a fine polish, never tarnishes and requires no cleaning.

Crabs and Earthquakes.

Chilean papers state that two days prior to the latest earthquake in the bay of Payta thousands of crabs of an unknown kind crawled on shore. They were all greatly excited, as if escaping from an enemy.

OUR CITY

Minneapolis Times Tells of Its Future.

The following regarding Thief River Falls was published in the Minneapolis Times last Saturday. It was written by a staff correspondent of that paper, and was illustrated by two river scenes:

Thief River Falls, Minn, May 25.—Here indeed lies the gateway to a great and undeveloped region.

Soil, timber, air, water, climate, minerals, markets, game, fish, health and wealth, all unite to make this section and its chief city an ideal home. This is indeed, "The Land of Promise."—Here, on every hand, stretch vast plains and timber belts, fertile fields and forests that in fertility of soil and natural resources is unsurpassed.

The city of Thief River Falls is situated at the junction of the Thief and Red Lake rivers, within a stone's throw of the Red Lake Indian reservation and twelve hours' journey by steamer from the government agency. It has grown to be a lively, distributing, agricultural and industrial center. The city, the population of which now numbers 2,000, is built upon a townsite which is capable of furnishing business and residence accommodations for a great number of people. Few towns are so hapily located. Built upon the only natural outlet for the product of the vast timber forests to the east and northeast of it, and at the very point where the river begins to be navigable, its destiny reveals itself even to the least observing. Two sawmills insure for the town an enviable reputation as a lumber manufacturing center. Within the past year one of these mills (the larger) has changed hands, has been torn down, and at the present time is being reconstructed and refitted with the latest of modern machinery and improvements, at a cost of $75,000. This mill is being built most substantially in view of the vast amount of pine which is destined to be manufactured at this point. The plant, when completed, will have a yearly capacity of 40,000,000 feet of manufactured lumber. The new company, which now owns the mill, at this time have in possession 250,000,000 feet of pine and are buying more.

A flouring mill of 500 barrels daily capacity, does a thriving business, taking advantage of the water power. In connection with its grinding, it does an elevator and storage business. Besides this mill three elevators are maintained here, and during the year

SCRAP IS ON

Another County Seat War in Marshall County.

The war between Warren and Argyle over the county seat is to be renewed again. The board of county commissioners of Marshall county in session at Warren last week voted to build a new jail and a commodious court house at Warren. A large delegation was present from Argyle to oppose such action. The strife is very bitter, and the Argyle faction will attempt injunction proceedings in order to stay the matter until a vote can be taken. Meantime the commissioners will go ahead and advertise for plans and specifications. This action has precipitated what has been brewing for a long time,—a red hot county seat fight.

GOT TIRED

Of Farming and Stole Horses for a Living.

The St. Hilaire Spectator last week gave the following account of the horse stealing affair which occured down there:

Last fall a young fellow by the name of Charles Christianson moved into this country from North Dakota leaving his team with a farmer near Thief Rives Falls and worked in the pineries during the winter. Some time in March he came down and rented a farm from G. Ness, of River Falls township, and along with his own team he bought another span of horses from Mr. Ness giving a mortgage on his own team, lumber wagon, harness, etc. All was sunshine for a time, but the rains came on and like other tillers of the soil we presume Mr. Christianson must have caught the "blues" and not attending to them in time, they may have run into something of a violent nature as his subsequent action indicates. On Thursday, May 18th, he borrowed a horse from Mr. Ness to finish up his spring work which had been very much delayed on account of the weather. Mr. Ness with his usual sagacity must have read something between the lines or "smelled a rat" for on the next day he sent one of his sons over to the farm to see how his tenant was getting along, and on arriving there you can imagine his surprise; no tenant was there, the wheat left for seed was all gone and the sacks filled with hay and likewise the oats; and all five horses. Mr. Ness at once drove to town as fast as possible to look for the culprit and no one here had seen him, but a farmer from the town of Sanders had seen a wagon about a mile west of town stuck in the mud which answered the description. Ness drove out and found it to be the one he was looking for, Christ Hall, our village marshall, and Dan Patterson went out to look for the man and horses and found the latter in a poplar grove about a mile west of where the wagon was found but no driver. They took the horses to town and later in the evening Mr. Hall and Constable Fellman went out again but on arriving there they found the wagon with its contents had been set on fire and reached there in time to save the most of it. All went well until Sunday morning when Mr. Ness went out to the barn to feed his stock he found two of his best horses missing again, so he at once organized a company and the horses were tracked to the pasture of Mr. Just, about four miles south of where they were taken. Will Bramsness, of the pursuing party, had the pleasure of going up and speaking to Christianson but after making his wants known he was politely told to move on, which was emphathised by producing a 44-56 calibre army revolver—and the culprit held the right-of-way while Bramsness moved. Four shots were fired and during the fracas one of the horses broke loose and started for home. Ness is still one horse shy.

Feast of Good Cheer.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the coming anniversary of the thirty-first annual council fire and feast of good cheer, to take place at White Earth on Wednesday, June 14, 1899. The entertaining feature of this year's celebration will surpass in point of attraction and amusement all previous like occasions, and large gatherings of the different totem clans from all the Objiwas in the state will be present and who will participate in their original native feast, games, dances, etc.

Additional Pay for Boys of Co. L.

Capt. Decker has received the pay rolls for signatures of those of his company who were at Camp Ramsey prior to their muster into the service of the U. S. They were paid at regular army rate, and the state now pays them in addition enough to bring it to pay of state militia which is $1.50 per day. They were in camp nine days, as such and are now to receive $8.40 for each man.—Crookston Times.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The Ladies' Home Journal is looking after the physical as well as the mental well-being of its readers, beginning in the June issue a department which it calls, "Five-Minute Talks on Good Health." This department is edited and directed by Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. Warman, authorities on physical education, who will explain how easy a matter is to have good health through the proper exercise of the muscular forces of the body.

The statement of a Pittsburg man, who has just returned from Europe, to the effect that foreign capitalists have been so impressed by the success of American manufacturers that they are anxious to make investments here, is not surprising. While the tremendous strength and importance of the industrial interests of the United States have long been recognized, there has been no time in the past when such recognition was so general as it is at present. The interest of British manufacturers and capitalists has been especially directed to this country by the success of American industrial concerns in securing contracts for locomotives, machinery and iron and steel structural work which, in the natural course of events, as they were viewed by foreigners previous to the beginning of this year, would have been placed in England. Of course the investment of foreign capital here is no new thing, but just now the subject has peculiar interest for wealthy men on the other side of the water who keep close watch of the development of manufacturers in the United States.

Although the contest is not till another year, the question of a successor to Knute Nelson is already being widely discussed and some defference of opinion expresed as to the probability of opposition within the Republican party. The state has not in the past been very loyal to its first term senators, but the advantages gained by continuing Senator Davis at Washington till he had climbed to the top of the heap, although he did not greatly distinguish himself till far into his second term, has considerably modified Minnesota sentiment. We think, therefore, that Senator Nelson will be re-elected without serious opposition in his own party. He has had long experience in public life which is invaluable to him as a legislator, while as a worker for state interests he is constant and tireless. Surely no one outside of Minneapolis would ask the honor, and there the movers would have to leave the field of experienced public men and bring out a candidate with a barrel, though not necessarily in the flouring business. Such action just at this time when great combinations of wealth are forming would hurt the party and prove unwise in many ways. Better counsel will prevail.—Bede's Budget.

1898 they handled altogether 600,900 bushels of wheat. The yield of wheat upon the lands tributary to this city was enormous and as a matter of course, Thief River Falls came in for its full share of the benefit. For wheat alone, over $100,000 was paid out last year.

River traffic is a feature at this point, and upon it the town depends as a very material factor in its financial welfare.

During the summer months this is the only means of transportation into the Red Lake agency and the many little settlements both along the river and about the great lake. Loggers both on the streams tributary to Red Lake and on the Red Lake river also depend upon the steamboat traffice for their supplies and transportation of their men. The coming summer three new river steamers will be completed, two to be built by the government for the transportation of supplies to the Indian agency; and one by private parties for general freight and passenger business.

River excursions of tourists are no uncommon thing, and many are the travelers who avail themselves of this most beautiful trip up the twining river and about the lake, into the very heart of a wild new country. The hand of man has so far done little in altering the appearance of this vast wild country and even "Poor Lo" wanders free to seek his own devices. There are now five regular river boats which will convey the travelers to any portion of this new country.

In real estate the outlook after some years of depression is now beginning to brighted up and the prospects in this direction are most favorable. Business lots fronting the principal streets of the city bring from $800 to $1,000. Residence property fluctuates from $25 to $300 a lot according to its relative location to the business portions. Choice farm lands near the city bring all the way from $3 to $10 an acre and homestead lands opened from the reservation in 1896 can be had for the taking. This is bringing in settlers who are beginning to realize the full agricultural value of these homestead lands and the increase is steady. The best of rich and fertile land from twenty to forty miles north of the city can be had for nothing. The advantages of the city of Thief River Falls may be briefly summarized as follows:

Here are located several good church edifices, town hall, graded schools employing ten teachers, two newspapers; theological, medical and legal professions well represented. A full compliment of stores of various kinds, especially general merchandise, and shops representing the various industries; an unsurpassed water power, flour mill, three elevators, two saw mills. The water power at this place gives the city great importance, as it is capable of supplying water to various and numerous mills that may be located within its reach. The dam is large, substantially constructed, resting on the solid hard-pan of the bed of the river, and the head race is blasted out of the solid rock, which can scarcely be abraided by the flowing waters. It is in close rivalry with the Minneapolis water power, both for permanence and for the value of power available.

The city is also the present terminus of a branch of the Great Northern railroad.

In regard to the resources of the great country tributary to Thief river too much in its praise cannot be said.

Every cereal at all adapted to a northern clime is produced here at its very best. Every species of vegetables ever raised in northern states is also produced here and the yield is enormous. Wheat yielding from twenty to thirty bushels per acre, potatoes from 200 to 400 bushels per acre, and all other farm products in similar proportion, seems incredible, yet it is true.

The timber lands are adjacent to and in fact mingled with the western terminus of the vast pine timber belt extending across northern Michigan, Wisconsin and a part of Minnesota. In the two former states these forests of untold wealth have mostly melted away before the invading forces of man, and here at this western terminus the great forests cease until we cross the broad expanse of fertile plains and reach the Pacific slope. Pine, maple, oak, ash, poplar, elm, birch and cedar are the timbers mostly found here. Red Lake and its tributaries are the outlet for the transportation of timber from the Red Lake reservation, and forms one of the finest natural highways for the handling of timber to be met with anywhere. Vast timber belts, ready markets and convenient facilities for lumbering operations unite in presenting the most inviting field for the capitalist and laborer alike.

The largest game on the continent is the moose. Taller than the horse, often weighing as much as an ox, his chosen home in the dense forest and wild morses; as much at home in the deep, swift waters as upon its banks, and his favorite food in the summer a sort of moss growing upon the bottoms of streams. The moose stands without a rival in the game world, and notwithstanding his immense size, the flesh of the moose is of the very finest quality, surpassing all others of the deer family. Caribou, a species of the arctic reindeer, is next in size—the moose and grizzly bear of the Rocky mountains alone being the largest of all the game of the new world. The moose and caribou abound in the vicinity of Red lake, while the black bear, red deer and small game of all kinds are also very plentiful. The waters of the lakes and rivers in summer are the resort of water fowl in myriad quantities, and sportsmen cannot find a better place to enjoy the use of the rifle and shotgun than here. Fish also abound in all the lakes and streams in great variety, and comprise whitefish, pickerel, pike, sturgeon, catfish and many other varieties of table fish.

No soil on earth surpasses much of these lands in productiveness. They vary somewhat in character, from heavy clay and loam to occasional sandy ridges, while the grass lands and lands along the valleys of the numerous streams are made rich by the annual deposits of vegetation for centuries—a species of peat or muck, and the depth of soil and richness of its formation insures its fertility for ages.

These lands are gently rolling and level, and all, or nearly all, naturally drained. Here and there are spots where cheap artificial drainage could be used as an advantage, and the fall is always sufficient to make this easy and practicable. No one who has ever carefully examined these lands, either as a practical agriculturist or geologist, has ever pronounced them other than possessing unsurpassed fertility and richness.

Those desiring to engage in agricultural pursuits will find a wide field for operation here. No better grazing lands exist than those on the reservation and all kinds of stock are here at their best. The most nutritious grasses, purest waters and abundant shades combine to make this an ideal realm for stock raising.

No atmosphere or climatic condition is purer than this section enjoys, and invalids find the destroying hand of time turned back and restored health wrenches lost years from his relentless grip. Italian skies, immortalized in poetry and song, are outrivaled here, for heaven's eternal blue is revealed in its most transparent beauty; and aurora—weird, majestic, grand—often appear in heavens with a brilliancy and grandeur unknown in the land of the Caesors, unseen above the tombs of the Pharaohs and whose mellow lustre of infinite variety and loveliness defies forever earth's greatest artists to copy. The spectre of eternal ice and blizzards which haunts so many as they glance at the map and note the position of Red Lake and surrounding country, has no foundation in fact.

Meehan, James Meehan, Sirtine, Burns, Morisette, Zeh, Francis, Bye, Jerome, Stranahan, Donaldson, Mussey, VanDyne, Dobner, Lewin, Tarrant, Jackson, Kratka, Caldwell, Richardson, Kretzschmar, Mullarky, Grundy, Moylan, Eastman and Misses May and Sarah Vaughn.

MICROBES ON THE BRAIN.

'Tis said—
There are microbes in the sugar, there are microbes in the milk,
There are microbes in my slippers and in my gown of silk,
There are microbes up above us, there are microbes down below,
So I know not how to clothe myself and know not where to go.
There are microbes in my boudoir, there are microbes down the stairs,
There are microbes on the Stock Exchange and microbes with the bears:
These animals who try to down all stocks (they do not bowl)
Call loudly thro', "A microbe dwells within the telephone."
I telephone no more to friends, as I've been wont to do,
Lest while I talk unwittingly I swallow microbes too.
Good gracious, I am frightened quite to stir or move about.
I do not dare to stay at home and shudder to go out.
Papa thinks microbes were begot in Eden long ago
And honestly found that tree perhaps where apples used to grow,
And all these centuries they've lived invisible to sight,
Till wonderful modern microscopes have brought the things to light.
He says they ever have been fought by doctors in [illegible]
With illness; but they then were called "bad tastes" and "infection."
O faculty, 'tis good for you, this microscopic fad,
But for a tim'rous public, I assure you, it is bad.
Spirit of grandma, tell me how you managed in your day
To live and love and eat and drink in such a simple way.
You drank fresh water from the well and fresh milk from the cow
And worried not o'er microbes, as it is the fashion now.
And so you lived, dear grandma, for over eighty years;
Your life filled our young hearts with joy, your death our eyes with tears.
Perhaps I can attain that age and keep my freshness too,
If I dismiss this microbe craze and all my thoughts anew.
Papa says, "All must do it, or else," he says,
"'Tis plain
Our race will pine away and die with microbes on the brain."

Quietly Observed.

Memorial day was very quietly observed in Thief River Falls this year. No elaborate preparations had been made, but owing to the fact that it rained all day everything had to be abandoned. The old soldiers met in the morning and proceeded to Greenwood cemetery where the graves of the dead soldiers were decorated. The cemetery presented a very neat appearance, having been placed in excellent condition by Frank Tilton.

It was the intention of the school children to celebrate the day by having appropriate exercises in front of the Central school.

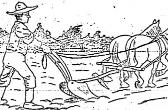
ST. PAUL, - MINN.



I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. Wagon Rack and Stanchion Combining Simplicity and Certainty.

Arthur Seebach of Minnesota sends to the Breeder's Gazette a plan for a wagon rack and stanchion.

The dimensions of rack (Fig. 1) are as follows: Use inch lumber for rack 3 feet high and 12 feet long. Top board, 9 feet 8 inches long; lower board, 12 feet long; 6 inch space between boards. The upright side pieces, or slats, are all made of hard wood. Slats A, B and D are 3 inches wide; slat C, 1 inch wide: all double. Slat E is single, placed outside, 3 inches wide, 2½ feet long. Slat F is also single, placed inside, 2 inches wide and 16 inches long; this slat is to rest on top edge of wagon box and to hold front end gate when used as a hog rack. Slats are spaced apart as given in Fig. 1. The cut out board G, for placing on your wagon seat, is slid in between double slat D and bolted to slats E and F. Nailed near the top on the inside of rack and in front of slat C is a hard wood block (H) ½ by 18 inches; it is used to prevent the stanchion from being pulled down backward. Use ordinary end gates and end rods for the rack in either end.

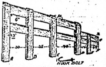

FIG. 1—CATTLE RACK FOR WAGON.

The movable stanchion (Fig. 2) is made 5 feet high and 3 feet wide or inside width of wagon box. Cross pieces at top and bottom are double. Bottom ones are of 10 inch planks and top ones are of 6 inch planks. The uprights are of 3 by 4. The two middle uprights are movable sideways at the top to open the stanchion and are locked by sticking in ordinary iron pins between them.

For hauling cattle after the rack is on the wagon place stanchion crossways between the racks in the wagon box in front of block H. Bolt it down with hook bolts (I), running the bolts through the bottom of wagon box and wagon box crosspiece underneath. Next bolt it sideways on to the rack with hook bolts at J. Hook bolts are one-half inch thick, 12 inches long, with 3 inch hook, threaded plentifully. To prevent the stanchion from being pushed down forward use two stout braces running upward diagonally from the bottom of front end of wagon box to the front of stanchion against brace block at about point K (Fig. 2). For ugly and dangerous animals tie their heads downward, running ropes through bottom of wagon box.

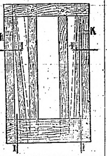

FIG. II—MOVABLE STANCHION FOR CATTLE RACK.

Farm Cattle Increasing.

Because of difficulty in securing cattle in the southwest to finish on the grass of the northwestern region it is predicted that there will be a shortage of range cattle next fall. This may come to pass, but there is not likely to be a scarcity of cattle at that time. The cattle business is undergoing some changes, but they are likely to be felt in the source of the supplies rather than in any reduction of them. Northwestern cattle may decrease. If so, southwestern will increase accordingly as more are finished there and fewer sold to the north. And it seems safe to count on increased numbers from the farms before very long. For several years farmers have been at work rebuilding their herds of beef cattle, and some of the results of this general effort are about due on the market. Young cattle are not yet plentiful, as the process of restocking is necessarily slow, but there are more on hand now than for years.—National Stockman.

Are Sheep Unhappy?

The old saying that sheep are always an unhappy flock is only true in the sense that the too common way of tending sheep is the reverse of what it should be. The secret of success in this industry lies in this first, that the shepherd knows perfectly every risk to which a flock is subject, and, second, that every one of the risks is provided for before it has become effective. A good shepherd knows all these risks and provides in advance for them, and so they are all escaped. This is the whole secret of the success of those who succeed.—American Sheep Breeder.

TOMMY'S EXPERIMENT.

It May Have Pleased Him, but It Didn't Please Miss Passee.

Tommy's father and mother are both very proud of their hopeful's thirst for knowledge. But there are times when they feel impelled to the conclusion that the little fellow carries the thirst to extreme. One of these occasions occurred the other evening, when Miss Passee staid to dinner.

As soon as Tommy had finished his second piece of pie and had given up hope of obtaining a third he asked to be allowed to leave the table for a moment. Permission was granted him, and he slipped out of the room. In a few seconds he returned with the dainty Dresden clock from the parlor mantelpiece.

"Gracious, child!" exclaimed the mother. "What mischief are you up to with that clock?"

"Goin to try a 'speriment," replied Tommy with importance.

Miss Passee tittered. "The dear little fellow is going to try an experiment!" she gushed. "How clever of him!"

While Miss Passee was speaking, Tommy had carefully placed the clock on the table in front of her. With a mysterious gesture he laid his finger on his lips and enjoined silence. No one stirred.

After about 1½ minutes Tommy's strained expression relaxed, and he clapped his hands in exultation. "It goes!" he cried triumphantly. "It goes! You were dead wrong, pop!"

Tommy's father said nothing, but looked apprehensive.

"Of course, it goes, child," laughed Miss Passee. "What made your father think it wouldn't?"

"Well," replied the little fellow simply, "he said your face would stop the best clock ever made!"—New York World.

Taunting a Villain.

"How long must you persist in your machination?" she demanded, her voice rising almost to a shriek.

The villain's lip curled, but not a word spake he.

"Why," exclaimed the maiden, "you have already persisted almost as long as if this were a Wagner cycle and the audience had brought sandwiches!"

Now the villain laughed, but his chagrin was apparent.—Detroit Journal.

A Woman Tries It.

Husband (sick at home)—Did you mail that letter I gave you?

Wife (back from hurried shopping tour)—N-o; I forgot it until the last minute.

"It was very important."

"Oh, it's all right! I gave it to a little boy who promised to give it to another little boy whose half uncle lives next door to a letter carrier."—New York Weekly.

A Passenger's Opinion.

Lady (at railway station)—Is there any objection to dogs in this car, conductor?

Gentleman (on platform)—I am not the conductor, madam. I will say, however, that there is a crying baby in this car, and if your dog is big enough to swallow the baby I think he will be welcome.—New York Weekly.

Why They Don't.

"All men seem to consider themselves lords of creation," she said. "You never hear of a woman going on that assumption."

"Certainly not," he replied. "They can't."

"I'd like to know why not."

"Because of their sex."

Thus she learned to choose her words more carefully.—Chicago Post.

A Dead Weight.

Mae—Bessie must have been shamming yesterday when Jim Strong pulled her out of the water. Why, she can swim like a fish.

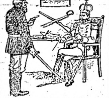
Ethel—Oh, but she really was in great danger this time. You see, she had all her engagement rings on, and they dragged her down.—New York Journal.

Her Hubby's Teachings.

Friend—Why do you get married so soon after the death of your husband?

Widow—My dear, if there was any one thing that my poor dead and gone husband insisted upon, in season and out, it was that I should never put off till tomorrow what I could do today.—New York Weekly.

Not Too Confident.



"M. Muravieff," asked the czar, "what luck are we going to have with this peace conference?"

"Can't say," replied the statesman. "If we could whip all the other nations, we might make them accept our benevolent propositions; but, as it is"—

When Wifey Pouts.

"I think," he said, "that my wife has a hallucination that she was once rich or an heiress or something."

"Why so?" they asked.

"Because whenever she gets provoked she insists upon saying that I never loved her and yet I married her."—Chicago Post.

St. Hilaire Wins from Thief River Falls Again.

The second game of the season between Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire was played on the grounds of the former Sunday, and St. Hilaire was again victorious. Several wild throws were the cause of the Thief River Falls players being beaten, and it is safe to say that they will have to do more practicing if they intend to win any games this summer. The following were the players:

St. Hilaire.	Position.	T. R. F.

Sent to the Asylum.

Olof Larson and Ole Runnigan, of Numedal, were here on Monday, having in charge one Andreas A. Mossestad, who for the past three weeks has been possessed of a strong inclination to cross the River Jordan by the razor route, having made three unsuccessful attempts to cut his throat. The only reason he would offer for his acts was the late spring and being unable to seed his wheat on account of the wet weather. It was stored in his granary which leaked, so he concluded to end his troubles. He was taken before Judge Knight who pronounced him insane and Sheriff Sampson departed with him for the hospital at Fergus Falls on Tuesday afternoon.—Red Lake County Courier.

A Close Call.

Wednesday afternoon Dr. Lemieux was summoned to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cyr to attend their six year old son who he found writhing in great agony caused by eating artichokes and orange peel. The stomach pump was brought into play which afforded the sufferer relief in a short time. The little fellow had a narrow escape and if medical attendance could not have been obtained immediately it might have proved fatal. This should be a warning to parents who allow children to eat orange peel, or other truck of this kind, which at best is a dangerous experiment.—Red Lake County Courier.

AN EXCURSION

The Pupils of the City Schools Had One.

The pupils of the Knox and Central schools last Saturday enjoyed a short trip up the Red Lake river, the former going on the "Margerette" and the latter on the "Ethel." The steamboats only ran up to the sorting gap, where a large jam of logs had lodged and made it impossible to proceed further. It had been the intention to go up as far as High Landing.

An Afternoon Party.

Mrs. H. Lewin entertained a number of ladies last Saturday afternoon. Progressive euchre was the amusement, the first prize being won by Mrs. Stebbins and the foot prize by Mrs. Richardson. Those present were: Mesdames Stebbins, Borry, Zeh, P. Meehan, James Meehan, Sirrine, Jackson, Morisette, Knox, Stranahan, Dobner, Mullarky, Richardson, Kratka, Caldwell, Eastman and Misses Bessie Bailey, Sarah and May Vaughn.

June Weather.

Dr. Hicks illustrates his predictions for June with a picture showing vivid flashes of lightning, cyclonic winds, with crumbling houses and numerous boards and flying through the air. He foresees a boisterous month, with occasional earth quake symtoms where those visitations abide. The reason of this condition is due to astronomical causes, which have more or less affected the weather for the past three or four months. The planet Venus has its equinoctial period about the 7th, continuing with diminishing force until near the end of the month. The moon, he says, is on the "celestial equator" June 1st, hence the disturbances due the latter part of May will be carried into the next month. Electrical phenomena, with high temperature, rain and hail, will be the prevailing characteristics. Cooler weather followed these disturbances, passing eastward from the 1st to the 3rd. It will grow steadily warmer from the 3rd to the 6th, cloudiness will follow, attended by much hail and thunder in many sections, from the 4th to the 6th. "An annual crisis of magnetic and electrical excitation falls on and touching June 11th." The planet Saturn is accredited with interposing his opposition on the 10th, coincident with the disturbances on the 11th, hence he schedules active thunder storms, hail and rain as almost certainties, with seismic shakes for ten days before and after date. Extremely high temperature, followed by sudden changes to cooler, will follow the thunder, rain and hail, with touches of frost far northward about the 11th to the 14th. The moon crosses the celestial on the 15th, a marked change to warmer, with rapid development of active storms. From the 16th to the 18th these conditions will grow in intensity, causing storms lightning, rain and hail. Daily squalls of showers and wind, with electrical displays all around the heavens, during the evenings, and often throughout the nights, are to be expected through this part of June. He consoles with the assurance that "these disturbances are not tornadic or dangerous," but it is just as well to be on the lookout for them. The remainder of the month will be of about the same character, and upon the whole he says that June will bring ample rain to most parts of the country and perhaps too much to central and southern sections. By the end of the month a lack of rainfall will be felt in the west and northwest, continuing through the following months of summer and autumn. Haymakers are admonished that June showers will jeopardize their crops, and the public is cautioned against taking shelter under trees and in barns during the prevailance of severe lightning. In your homes keep the doors and windows closed and keep away from chimneys or other material leading to moist earth.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Minnesota's seven congressmen met in St. Paul last week and decided to support Gen. Henderson, of Iowa, for speaker.

Congressman Eddy left the first of the week for the Pacific coast where he will remain for a few weeks enroute to Alaska.

G. F. Swift, the Chicago packer, has leased 70,000 acres of land on the Comanche Indian reservation and will pasture a large heard of cattle there this year.

Anthony Kelly, the well known Minneapolis wholesale merchant, died last week. Mr. Kelly was one of the pioneers of the state and had been an important factor in the development of the Northwest.

From Washington comes the report that the green timber cut on the Indian reservation this winter mixed with that cut under the "dead and down" act that was not cut by the lumbermen, but by the Indians who were clearing up farms. Where, or where, is Gus Bellyache?—Princeton Union.

ALASKA THEN AND NOW.

Wm. E. Curtis furnishes the following interesting remarks to the Chicago Record: The anti-expansionists of 1899 are using the same arguments against the acquisition of new territory that were offered against the purchase of Alaska thirty years ago. It was argued then that we had enough land of our own; that Alaska was worthless, and that it was a bad policy to increase our national responsibilities; that it would be necessary to retain a large military post up there, and that the necessary taxes to support it would be a great burden upon the people. Nothing, however, was said about the consent of the governed. In answer to an inquirer, I would say that much of this opposition came from the leaders of the dominant party in congress, as is the case with the Philippines. Orange Ferris, of New York, for example said in debate that Alaska was a "wretched, God forsaken region, worth nothing, and a positive injury and incumbrance." He moved an amendment to the annexation bill authorizing the president to pay $7,200,000 "to any respectable European, Asiatic or African power that would take Alaska off our hands."

So good a man as Representative Hiram Price, of Iowa, declared that the $7,200,000 which we paid for Alaska was "a dead loss to us, and the more expense we incur the worse it will be for the country and the people."

Gen. B. F. Butler said: "If we are to pay her (Russia) for her friendship, I desire to give her the $7,200,000 and let her keep Alaska. No man except the insane enough to buy the earthquakes of St. Thomas and the icefields of Greenland could be found to agree to its acquisition."

Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois, took the same position in regard to Alaska that Mr. Hoar takes regarding the Philippines, and he lived to realize his folly. He urged congress not to ratify the treaty; he declared that the government was taking upon itself unnecessary and expensive responsibilities, and went so far as to predict that no part of Alaskan territory would ever be inhabited by white men.

This illustrates how frequently good men go wrong and how easy it is for wise men to be mistaken. The price paid for Alaska was $7,200,000. The acre acquired was 369,529,000 acres, so that it was about 2 cents an acre. The Alaska fur companies have already taken over $33,000,000 worth of sealskins and they have paid into the treasury over $6,000,000 as royalties, with $1,340,533 still unsettled.

The fish product of Alaska in 1897 was valued at $2,977,019. During the last fifteen years it has exceeded $30,000,000. The commissioner of fish and fisheries in a letter to congress estimated the value of the Alaska fisheries, excluding whales and seals, at $67,890,000, or nine and one-half times the cost of purchase.

The gold output has exceeded $15,000,000 already. The Treadwell mine alone up to 1897 had paid $6,625,945 as dividends to its stockholders and claims to have several millions in sight. In that year alone the output of the mine was $2,439,000 and in 1898 it was nearly twice as much.

When Mr. Seward was asked what he considered the most important event in his career he replied: "The purchase of Alaska: but it will take the people a generation to find it out."

John Savoy came down from the Red Lake yesterday.

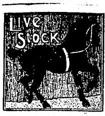
Thirty-seven acres have already been broken and a part of this will be cultivated and vines planted this year. The remainder, together with more yet to be broken, will be put into flax this year. I am a farmer located near Stony Brook, one of the most malarious districts in this State, and was bothered with malaria for years, at times so I could not work, and was always very constipated as well. For years I had malaria so bad in the spring, when engaged in plowing, that I could do nothing but shake. I must have taken about a barrel of quinine pills besides dozens of other remedies, but never obtained any permanent benefit. Last fall, in peach time, I had a most serious attack of chills and then commenced to take Ripans Tabules, upon a friend's advice, and the first box made me all right and I have never been without them since. I take one Tabule each morning and night and sometimes when I feel more than usually exhausted I take three in a day. They have kept my stomach sweet, my bowels regular and I have not had the least touch of malaria nor splitting headache since I commenced using them. I know also that I sleep better and wake up more refreshed than formerly. I don't know how many complaints Ripans Tabules will help, but I do know they will cure any one in the condition I was and I would not be without them at any price. I honestly consider them the cheapest-priced medicine in the world, as they are also the most beneficial and the most convenient to take. I am twenty-seven years of age and have worked hard all my life, the same as most farmers, both early and late and in all kinds of weather, and I have never enjoyed such good health as I have since last fall; in fact, my neighbors have all remarked my improved condition and have said, "Say, John, what are you doing to look so healthy?"

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S, 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 5 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.



MATING.

The Male Is Not by Any Means the Whole Herd.

Many are satisfied with having a pure bred male of reputable pedigree at the head of the herd, regardless of whether his type and points of excellence are in harmony with the requirements of the herd or not, forgetting that defects that are common to both parents intensify themselves in the offspring, says The Homestead. Just what it is that at all points goes to make up the obscure thing known as "a good nick" would be difficult to define, but one of its elements undoubtedly is that weakness at certain points on one side of the house should be compensated for by strength in those particulars on the other. The fact involves a careful selection of the females in the breeding herd with a view of securing uniformity in them. For if they be widely at variance with respect to their physical conformation no sire can be chosen that will nick with them at all. If, however, the females of the herd be uniform, showing in a general way a similarity in their strong points and their weak ones, the sire to be used on the herd can then be selected with a view of correcting deficiencies, and to the extent that the uniformity prevails on the one side and the selection has been good on the other uniform results may be expected in all the offspring. In too many cases the purchaser of a sire relies upon somebody else's judgment to pick him a good one, the person intrusted with this duty perhaps never having seen the herd on which such selection is to be used. If, however, the sire is chosen with special reference to the use that is to be made of him, outstanding defects can, to a large extent, be corrected, and by pursuing this policy for a series of generations great improvement can be effected. If the female herd is of one line of breeding through a series of years, the defects will be likely to be of one general type. Suppose, for example, they have too much length of leg, then a sire that is particularly low down will contribute to breed out the defect. Suppose there is a deficiency in the heart girth and, consequently in vigor and constitution, then a sire having a large heart girth will measurably cure the difficulty in the offspring. If there is weakness in the flank, a male should be strong there. If the females are coarse and inclined to be rough, fining down can be accomplished by the use of a closely built, compact sire, and on the other hand, if the females are smooth, small boned, pretty and inclined to undersize, the selection of the male should be made with a view of correcting these faults.

Typical Kerry Bull.

The Kerry bull, Prince of Leinster 853, the property of C. Brinsley Marlay, Belvedere house, Mullingar, has had a most distinguished career in the showyard, having been first at the Royal Dublin society's shows for several years and also first at last year's Royal at Birmingham. He was bred by Viscount de Vesci, got by Gort Admiral 140, dam Princess Mary 778. The accompanying illustration is from the London Live Stock Journal.

Cultivate Digestive Power.

The ability to digest its food properly is, after all, the most important and necessary characteristic of any really valuable animal. It is possible to increase digestive power, and it can be done even before birth, by seeing to it that the dam bearing young is always supplied with good, nutritious food in proper quantities. A sow with pigs which is kept in cold quarters and poorly fed will almost certainly drop two or more runts in her litter. It is hard work making a runt pay its keep. The extra food it gets would have paid much better if fed to an animal properly born. All young animals have weak digestion. If they are never allowed to surfeit themselves, this will grow stronger. By the time a pig is 4 or 5 months old it will make faster growth, though not in proportion to its size, than it did first. It is a larger animal and can digest food that it could not while it was younger.—Boston Cultivator.

Blue Ridge For Sheep.

Maryland and Virginia are both excellent sheep states, especially so along the southern and easterly slopes of the Blue Ridge mountains and in all the hill and gently undulating districts from the foot of the Ridge to the sea. It is naturally a blue grass country for the most part, generally well watered and all near to the great lamb markets of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York.

IN WOMAN'S SFARE.

A LITTLE STORY BY MR. DOOLEY'S PREDECESSOR.

Colonel McNeery Makes a Call on the Lady Managers of the World's Fair and Is Highly Edified by Their Discussions.

Before that clever satirist Mr. Finley Peter Dunne wrote the "Mr. Dooley" sketches he created a character known to Chicago fame as Colonel McNeery. The May Bookman, in an interesting article by W. Irving Way, quotes one of the Colonel McNeery sketches as follows: The title of the sketch is "In Woman's Sfare," in which Colonel McNeery makes a call on the lady managers of the World's fair. It concludes with a "dispute between the 'Naypoltan' ice cream woman and the 'tooty frooty' lady manager."

"Thin Mrs. Potther Pammer says, 'Girls,' says she, 'come to ordher,' she says. 'There do be business iv importance to thransact.' An with that a poor, lone man climbs on th' platform. He do be th' guy they've sint out fr'm Wash'n'ton for to steer th' girls right on parlymeenthry law, an he looks as woorid an ongweed, as Tiddy says, as a pollsman in a planny concert. They've no more than set in th' an an iligant lookin woman she stands up an says she, 'Ladies,' she says, 'I moves we has Naypoltan ice crame at th' loonch-on.' 'Pint iv order,' says a gray haired old lady. 'Pint iv order,' says she. 'Shtate yo'er pint iv order,' says Mrs. Pammer, says she. 'Th' pint iv order,' says the gray haired lady, 'th' pint iv order,' says she, 'is that th' lady is not ta-alkin to th' question,' she says. 'Wo a-are here to discuss,' she says, 'for why shud not wimmen take their proper sfare,' says she. 'An, besides,' says she, 'tooty frooty have been ordhered already.' 'Th' pint is well taken,' says Mrs. Pammer. 'It is not,' says th' first lady. 'I want for to say that Naypoltan ice crame shud be ordered,' she says, 'for th' loonch-on an nothin the old shkate'—no, by gar, she didn't say that, Jawn—'th' old lady,' she says, 'that shpoke last,' says she, 'can't make me set down,' says she. 'Whose old?' says th' old lady. 'Yo minx,' says she. 'Yo'er a dishturber iv th' peace,' she says. 'Set down,' says all th' ladies that do be on th' side iv th' Naypoltan ice crame lady, an 'Thrun her out,' says all them that's with th' lady with the white hair. 'Ladies,' says Mrs. Pammer. 'Ordher,' she says, wallopin th' table with a fan. 'Will ye set down?' says th' white haired wan. 'Niver,' says th' Naypoltan ice crame wan, 'till I gets me rights, an whin I gets home,' she says, 'I'll be tillin me husband—boo hoo,' says she, cryin, 'what a horrid way I've been threated.'

"Thin th' other wan, she begins to weep, an then all th' pa-artizans iv th' Naypoltan lady an th' white haired tooty frooty lady they hollers, too, an Mrs. Pammer, she consults with th' man fr'm Wash'n'ton, an thin she raps with her fan an says, 'Ladies,' says she, 'let us be friends,' she says. 'Will ye both accipt an amendment for to have both Naypoltan an tooty frooty on th' table?' 'We will,' says they both in wan breath. 'Thin,' says Mrs. Pammer, ''tis so ordered.' Thin up jumps a little woman, an she says, says she, 'I moves,' she says, 'that we gives th' hankchef saloot,' she says, 'to our prisident,' she says, 'f'r her able manner,' she says, 'iv makin th' white winged angel iv peace shpread his wings,' she says, 'over the scene,' says she. An thin I goes out."

ACCIDENTALLY

Christian Sevaldson Killed by His Cousin.

Thirteen-year-old Martin Greenly shot and instantly killed his cousin, Christian Sevaldson, last Friday afternoon at about 5 o'clock. It was accidental.

The two in company with Ole Greenly, Bennie Ranum and Hoker Krockstad, were playing fort on the farm of their uncle, Ole Iverson, who lives on section 32, town 155, range 42, Marshall county, about 8 miles northeast of here. Young Greenly was in the barn and Sevaldson, who was trying to gain an entrance through a window, was shot at very close range, the charge of fine shot entering his forehead and blowing out his brains. He died instantly. Dr. Francis, of this city, was summoned and upon his advice Dr. J. D. Taylor, of Stevens, coroner of Marshall county, was notified.

The affair is a very sad one. Greenly says that he was unaware of the fact that the gun was loaded and that it was only half cocked. The dead boy, Christian Sevaldson, was seventeen years of age and was born in Norway. His brother, Bergen Sevaldson, who is a farmer and is well known here, lives on section 32, town 155, range 44, Marshall county.

COLLAPSED

A Two Story Brick Building in Red Lake Falls.

Last Monday afternoon the new two story brick block owned by Moise Bray and occupied by him as a saloon below, and residence in the second story, collapsed and is a complete wreck together with all its contents.

The building was errected during the winter, and was considered perfectly safe. The accident was due to the fact that in excavating for another building along side, the wall had been undermined. This had been noticed, and large timbers had been used to shore up the wall. The continued rains, however, had softened up the ground in the bottom of the excavation and the underlay of blue clay was forced out under the pressure with the result as stated. The accident occured at a time when the family happened to be out of the building and the people in the saloon became aware of trouble in time to make their escape. The stock of goods, fixtures, and household goods are a complete wreck. The extent of the crushing to which they were subjected, may be imagined by the fact that the piano in the living rooms was crushed into splinters.

Alien Labor Law.

Considerable comment has been caused by a flagrant violation of the alien law by D. W. Sprague, the Winnipeg lumber man, who has purchased the drive of four million feet of logs from the Crookston Lumber company.

The logs were sorted in the booms here and turned out to Mr. Sprague, who, it is said, has brought a force of 15 river drivers from Winnipeg who will run the drive to that city.

This amounts to an importation of foreign labor and is clearly a violation of the law which the Canadian government has been very careful to enforce against Americans. The matter has been called to the attention of the customs officers at St. Vincent and Pembina, and action is likely to be taken to prevent the proposed infraction of law.

The contractors in the Crow's Nest Railway in British Columbia took a large number of men from the states into the work last year, and the Canadian government raised such a row about it that the men were sent back at a considerable loss to themselves. The river drivers here in Crookston hoped to secure the work of taking the drive from Crookston to the international boundary, but it is said that on application they were informed that a crew had been brought from Winnipeg who would take the drive the entire distance.—Crookston Times.

Plenty of Steam.

The two large engines, which will be used to furnish power for the Thief River Falls Lumber company's saw mill, arrived in the city Monday and are being set up in the mill. They are each 350 horse power, making a total of 700.

GOOD IDEA

This County Should Have an Exhibit.

Will Red Lake county have an exhibit at the state fair this year? We ought to be represented in the sisterhood of counties, for, while the youngest in point of years of organization, our energetic citizens have been at work for many years carving out fame and fortune from the many resources nature has bestowed upon us. Red Lake county should be noted for its wheat, its stock, its flour and lumber. In these industries we hold a front rank. But the world does not know it. Let us advertise the fact and get a result and benefit.

Special inducements are offered by the managers of the state fair. A premium of $1200 is to be divided among the counties making the best exhibits, but in order to secure any part of this premium a county must score 70 points. In the past there have been county exhibits but the scores have been only from about 30 to 50 points. The managers this year, however, have decided that before a county gets any premium that county must score up to a good high standard, the same as in the case of cattle, horses, etc. In addition to the $1200 premium offered by the fair management the St. Paul Commercial club offers a $300 cash premium, $200 for first prize and $100 for second, for county exhibits.

The commissioners of Red Lake county will meet again July, and they ought to secure the services of a good man to work this matter up and look after it. Red Lake county could certainly win back the cost a hundred fold in the impetus to immigration.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Minnesota congressmen should receive appointments on the best committees. They were the original Henderson boomers.

J. H. Block, of St. Peter, will probably be the next state treasurer of Minnesota, and a better selection could not be made.

Ex-Gov. David M. Clough is said to have decided to go to the lumbering country in Washington state to make his future home.

It is said that C. A. Towne's friends in the Sixth district are declaring that if he is not elected to congress next year he will go abroad to live.

A tornado swept across a portion of Wisconsin Monday doing a great deal of damage. Nearly 100 were killed at New Richmond and a greater number injured.

J. C. McCook, United States consul at Dawson City, reports to the secretary of state, under date of March 31, that the gold produced in Alaska during the year 1898 will exceed $20,000,000, and he predicts that the output for 1899 will be double that amount.

When people feel inclined to grumble at the weather we are having here in the northwest, let them stop and consider how much more pleasant it must be down east where the temperature has been touching the nineties and where factories have been obliged to close temporarily in many instances, owing to there being so many cases of prostration among the workmen. Minnesota seems to average up pretty well, after all.—Detroit Record.

Did you ever hear of such a thing as a political machine of the pure Populist denominations? Read this from the McIntosh Times, a Populist newspaper, and be enlightened:

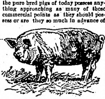
> The close shave experienced by the Populist county ticket at the last election emphasizes the fact that ring rule is distasteful to the people under the Populist, as under Republican rule, and that although purchased delegations may insure nominations, they do not increase the party strength, and are not likely in the future to insure election.

It is officially announced that the government of Japan will enter the international patent union on the first of July next. This will be good news to American manufacturers, as there has been no way to protect foreign patents in Japan, and that empire is filled with machines made by the Japanese in imitation of the best American and European patents. All a Japanese needs is a sample and he is able to reproduce it with marvelous accuracy. The common mills, the machine shops, the printing offices and every other industrial plant in Japan is equipped with imitation machinery. In 1895 I attended an exposition at Kobe, where a great building was filled with mechanical products of Japan, and nearly every one of them was a copy or a modification of some foreign invention. The Japanese have a patent system under the control of Mr. [illegible], who had charge of their exhibition in the manufactures building at the World's Fair, and they protect their own inventions, but they have persistently refused to protect foreign patents against piracy in their own country until other nations would recognize them as one of the civilized powers of the world. That recognition will take place in July, and Japan will join the international patent union at the same time.—William E. Curtis in the Chicago Record.

PIG OF TODAY.

Changes Wrought by Breeding In Twenty-five Years.

The majority of pig breeders would doubtless show little hesitation in affirming that the pig of today is infinitely superior to that which was generally found in this country, say, a quarter of a century since, writes Sanders Spencer in the London Stock Breeders' Magazine. Of this there appears to be little doubt, and, further, the breeders of pure bred pigs would appear to be well within their right when claiming that this marked improvement was mainly owing to the pigs which had been distributed from their herds, principally for crossing in the more ordinary farm pigs. But do the pure bred pigs of today possess anything approaching as many of these commercial points as they should possess or are they so much in advance of the common country pigs as they were two or three decades since? We fear not. And yet the difficulty of improving the pig stock of the country is now far greater than it was in years gone by, owing to the difference in form and quality between the two classes of pig having become less pronounced.



TYPICAL PIG OF TODAY.

Another difficulty presents itself to the breeders of pure bred pigs of today—the public taste, or fashion, demands a pig of the form and substance which is somewhat contrary to the form of the original pig, which carried the greater part of its weight in the fore quarters, whereas now the pig of today must furnish the greater portion of its meat from the ribs and hind quarters. Thus the pig of today must be a manufactured article, since the wild hog, from which all our domesticated pigs are descended, was so formed for defense and for the search for roots, bulbs, etc., that the major portion of its weight was in the fore quarters. We not only have to attempt to produce pigs totally dissimilar in form and character to the original foundation stock, but we have to be most particular in mating animals from as similar a source as possible, or we inevitably produce a pig with many of the undesirable points of the parents, and with few of those qualities which we are anxious to see exemplified in the pig of today. It is a well known fact that if we cross animals of two diverse types, and having but little in common, the probabilities are that the element of value in each particular parent will war with those of the other parent, and that the result will be an animal very similar to the original foundation stock, which possessed few, if any, of those points which had been cultivated.

Barley For Horses.

If barley is used at all for horses, it should be boiled and mixed with cut hay, roots, etc., and in this shape is far less dangerous and well adapted for fitting a horse quickly for sale or show, but for farm horses or those working at common labor there is no necessity of giving such boiled feed more than once a week, say on Saturday night, to move the bowels freely and cool the horse out over Sunday. If fed dry, the barley should be ground and mixed with oats and bran and should not form over one-quarter of the mess at any one meal and should not be fed more than once daily. We are insisting upon this because barley is dangerous food for horses, not so nutritious or digestible as oats, can usually be sold for a good price to buy oats and bran and finally for the reason that barley is splendidly adapted for the feeding of hogs along with boiled potatoes. Another danger in feeding barley is due to the "awns" or beards causing intestinal irritation, even enteritis and death, and this is the more liable to happen where the barley has not been properly cleaned, as is apt to be the case on the farm. In the malted state, or as brewers' grain, barley is often fed to brewers' horses and keeps them fat, soft and sleek, but such horses have to be gradually accustomed to the food and any horse put suddenly upon it would be liable to colic and death. In India they parch the barley, and we understand that in this form it is much less dangerous and proves valuable as food for horses.—Dr. A. S. Alexander in Breeder's Gazette.
